ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. DECHEN, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made so commodious; there have been completed the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements to add convenience hitherto unknown to an Hotel. The whole of the beds have, at a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION, to say the least of it, will continue as he, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half House in Canada.

Poetry.

For the Examiner.

"REMEMBER THY CREATOR IN THE DAYS OF THY YOUTH."

Oh, stay ye, youthful pilgrims, stay,
E'er you pursue life's dangerous way;
What numerous snares beset the road!
O pause, and meditate on God.

The early path you have pursued
May've seemed to you with roses strew'd;
Stop! ere you further persevere,
Lest troubles rise and storms appear.

You have embarked on life's dread sea,
Where whelming waves may threaten thee;
Though lowering clouds obscure the sky,
On your Creator still rely.

O, give to God thy youthful heart,
E'er vice and folly fix their dart;
Spend not your morn of life in vain,
Beware of Satan's baneful chain.

When youth and vigour nerves your arm,
When pride and beauty wield their charm,
Resist temptation—make thy vow,—
Remember thy Creator now.

God is the parent of thy soul,
Let Him thy acts of life control,
True piety soothes each earthly fear,
And cheers the soul when death draws near.

Too oft the careless young, the gay,
Do spurn this solemn thought away,
Seek God in youth,—No, they reply,
We will when old, and soon to die.

Ah, fond, you count without your host,
On that false point is thousands lost;
Delusive hope, trust not delay,
Soon death may steel your soul away.

Go, watch among the silent dead,
Mark well the ages o'er their head,
The babe, the youth, with old there lie,
Say then are you too young to die.

While youth's bright flush is on thy brow,
Remember thy Creator now;
All ages stand on equal par,
There's no discharge in death's great war.

PROTECTION.
A POEM FOR CHRISTMAS.

"Father is late," said the watching boy;
"I'll run through the wood to meet him,
For I love to see his smile of joy
When his little son comes to greet him.

"I'll take his axe from his weary hand,
And lay it over my shoulder;
I'll go to the clearing and help him, too,
When I am a few years older."

The boy set out through the forest dim,
There were prowlers watching his feet;
But the wild beasts waked no fears in him,
He would soon his father meet.

On, on he walked, till his little feet
Ached, and were growing weary;
"I'll rest," said he, "on this mossy seat,
For the way is long and dreary.

"I cannot hear the woodmen's axe,
So I think their work is done;
And father will surely pass this way,
For other there is none."

He sat him down on a tall tree's root,
To watch for his father's coming;
But soon a mist came o'er his eyes
And his ears heard only a humming.

And down he dropped by the tall tree's foot,
Never thinking of fear or joy;
And a kind little whirlwind heaped the leaves
All over the sleeping boy.

The father turned his weary feet
Toward his home in joy;
And he thought of the welcome awaiting him there,
And he thought of his darling boy.

He cast his eyes upon the ground,
And close by the side of the way,
He stopped to note a strange little mound,
Heaped up of leaves so gay.

He passed along, then turned—impelled
By a thought both strange and wild—
He cast the varied spread aside,
And saw his sleeping child.

He raised him gently in his arms,
And in his place he laid
A log of wood, and covered it o'er
With the leaves of the forest glade.

Then he withdrew to a sheltered spot,
For he heard a fearful howl;
And soon the wolves came creeping out,
And rould the mound they proul.

As they cast the light gay leaves aside,
And their glaring eyes were seen,
The father strained his child to his breast,
As he thought of what might have been!

He homeward strode, but the boy slept on
As over the ground they flew;
Of the danger threatened he nothing dream'd
Of the rescue he nothing knew.

And the father's feet never stopped or stayed
Till he passed the forest wild,
And said, as he sank on his own door stone
"Thank God, I've saved my child!"

So, Christian, dost thou walk life's maze,
While hidden foes surround thee;
So all unconscious oft art thou,
Of strong arms thrown around thee;

For angel hands do bear thee up,
Lest thou shouldst fall and perish;
Aye, One that's stronger still, His limbs
Doth ever fold and cherish.

And when that foe who seeks thy soul
To ruin and devour,
Shall find thee helpless and alone,
Oh, fear thou not his power;

For one that's mightier far than he
Will to thy rescue come;
He'll take thee in His own strong arms,
And bear thee to His home.

BRITISH VALOUR.

"HEARTS OF OAK ARE OUR MEN."

THE BATTLE OF CAMPERDOWN.

The great victory of St Vincents entirely disconcerted the well-conceived designs of Truguet for the naval campaign; but later in the season, another effort, with an inferior fleet, but more experienced seamen, was made by the Dutch Republic. For a very long period the naval preparations in Holland had been most extraordinary, and far surpassed anything attempted by the United Province for above a century past. The stoppage of the commerce of the Republic had enabled the government to man their vessels with a choice selection both of officers and men; and from the well-known courage of the sailors, it was anticipated that the contest with the English fleet would be more obstinate and bloody than any which had yet occured from the commencement of the war. De Winter, who commanded the armament was a staunch Republican, and a man of tried courage and experience. Nevertheless, being encumbered with land forces, destined for the invasion of Ireland, he did not attempt to leave the Texel till the beginning of October, when the English fleet having been driven to Yarmouth Roads by stress of weather, the Dutch government gave orders for the troops to be disembarked and the fleet to set sail, and make the best of its way to the harbour of Brest. Admiral Duncan was no sooner apprised by the signals of his cruisers that the Dutch fleet were at sea, than he weighed anchor with all imaginable haste and stretched across the German Ocean, with so much expedition, that he got near the hostile squadron before it was out of sight of the shore of Holland. The Dutch fleet consisted of fifteen ships of the line and eleven frigates. The English sixteen ships of the line and three frigates. Duncan's first care was to station his fleet in such a manner as to prevent the enemy from returning to the Texel, and having done this, he bore down upon his opponents, and hove in sight of them on the following morning, drawn up in order of battle at the distance of nine miles from the coast between Camperdown and Egmont. With the same instinctive genius, which afterwards inspired a similar resolution to Nelson at Aboukir, he gave the signal to break the line, and get between the enemy and the shore, a movement which was immediately and skillfully executed in two lines of attack, and proved the principal cause of the glorious success which followed, by preventing their withdrawing into the shallows, out of the reach of the British vessels which, for the most part, draw more water than their antagonists. Admiral Onslow first broke the line, and commenced a close combat; he was soon followed by Duncan himself at the head of the second line, who pierced the centre, and laid himself alongside of De Winter's flag-ship, and shortly the action became general, each English ship engaging its adversary, but still between them and the lee shore. De Winter perceiving the design of the enemy, gave the signal for his fleet to unite in close order; but from the thickness of the smoke his order was not generally perceived, and but partially obeyed. Notwithstanding the utmost efforts of valour on the part of the Dutch, the superiority of English skill and discipline soon appeared in the engagement, yard-arm to yard-arm, which followed.—For three hours Admiral Duncan and De Winter fought within pistol shot; but by degrees the Dutchman's fire slackened, his masts fell one by one overboard, amidst the loud cheers of the British sailors; and at length he struck his flag, after half his crew were killed or wounded, and his ship incapable of making any further resistance. The Dutch vice-admiral soon after struck to Admiral Onslow, and by four o'clock, eight ships of the line, two of fifty-six guns, and two frigates, were in the hands of the victors. No less skillful than brave, Admiral Duncan gave the signal for the combat to cease, and the prizes to be secured, which was done with no little difficulty, as during the battle both fleets had drifted before a tempestuous wind to within five miles of the shore, and were now lying in nine fathoms water. It was owing to this circumstance alone that any of the Dutch squadron escaped, but when the English withdrew into deeper water Admiral Story collected the scattered remains of his fleet, and sought refuge in the Texel, while Duncan returned with his prizes to Yarmouth Roads The battle was seen distinctly from the shore, where a vast multitude was assembled, who beheld in silent despair the ruin of the armament on which the national hopes had been so long rested.

This action was one of the most important fought at sea during the revolutionary war, not only from the valour displayed on both sides during the engagement, but the important consequences with which it was attended. The Dutch fought with a courage worthy of the descendants of Van Tromp and De Ruiter, as was evinced by the loss on either part, which, in the British was 525 men, and in the Batavian, 1,160, besides the crews of the prizes, who amounted to above 6,000. The appearance of the British ships at the close of the action was very different from what it usually is after naval engagements; no masts were down, little damage done to their sails or rigging; like their worthy adversaries, the Dutch fired at the hull of their enemies, which accounts for the great loss in killed and wounded in this well-fought engagement.

The national gratitude was liberally bestowed on the leaders in these glorious achievements. Sir John Jarvis received the title of Earl St. Vincents; Admiral Duncan that of Viscount Duncan of Camperdown, and Comodore Nelson that of Sir Horatio Nelson. From these victories may be dated the commencement of that concord among all classes, and that resolute British spirit which never afterwards deserted this country.

EARL OF CAMPERDOWN.

Adam Duncan, afterwards Viscount Duncan of Camperdown, was born at Dundee on the 1st of July, 1731, of which town his father was afterwards Provost. He [illegible] the rudiments of his education in that town, and was already remarked in his early youth for the suavity of manner and evenness of temper, which he continued to display through the whole of his life. He entered the navy in 1740, on board the Shoreham, and was present at the taking of the Havannah by Commodore Keppel in 1761, when he commanded the Valiant, 74, on board of which the Commodore had hoisted the broad pendant. On that occasion Duncan commanded the boats of the squadron and distinguished himself particularly by the ability with which they were conducted.—When the American war broke out, he was appointed to the command of the Monarch, 74, and evinced great skill in protending with the superior fleets of France and Spain when they cleared the Channel in 1779.

An opportunity, however, soon occurred of combating the enemy on terms of equality and again asserting the superiority of the British flag. In 1780 he was sent under Rodney to co-operate in the revictualling of Gibraltar, then blockaded by the French and Spanish fleets. Off Cape St. Vincent they fell in with the Spanish fleet in a heavy gale, and immediately gave chase, in the course of which the British copper-bottomed vessels rapidly gained on the enemy.—The Monarch had not that advantage, but by Duncan's admirable management, he was one of the first in the fleet to get into action. He steered direct into the middle of the three starmost of the enemy's vessels, and when warned of the danger of doing so before the other British ship could get up to his support, he calmly replied, "I wish to be among them," and held straight on. He was soon among the Spanish fleet, and engaged the St. Augustin on one side, yard-arm, to yard-arm and two other vessels, one of which bore 80 guns, on the other, and succeeded in compelling the former to strike, and forcing the two latter to sheer off. Subsequently he bore a distinguished part in the brilliant series of manœuvres by which Lord Howe, in 1782, revictualled Gibraltar, at the head of thirty-four ships of the line, in the face of the combined fleet of forty-six. On the 1st February 1793 he was made vice-admiral; but his merits were so little regarded by the Admiralty, seldom prone to bring forward persons who have not the advantage of aristocratic birth, that for a long time he could not obtain employment, and he even had serious thoughts of quitting the service altogether. At length, in April 1795, he received the chief command in the North Seas, and with it the opportunity, in its most critical period, of proving the saviour of his country.

Duncan's character, both in professional during and domestic suavity, closely resembled that of Collingwood. He had the same rapid eye and intrepid decision in action, the same boldness in danger, the same vigour in command, the same gentleness in disposition. Tall, majestic in figure, with an athletic form and noble countenance, he recalled the image of those heroes in whom the imagination of the poets has loved to embody the combination of vigour and courage, with strength and beauty. The rapidity of his decision, the justice of his glance, was equal to that of Nelson himself; the breaking of the Dutch line at Camperdown, and interposition of the British fleet between the enemy and their own shore, was dictated by the same genius which led Nelson to pierce and assail in rear the French squadron at Aboukir. But the most glorious, because the most unexampled part of his career, was the manner in which, when deserted by all the remainder of his fleet except one ship, he kept his station off the Helder, during the mutiny of the Nore, and by his personal influence and courage, maintained at that terrible crisis his own crew in subjection, and with them the appearance of a blockade, with two ships of the line, against fifteen. It is not going too far to say, that on his single conduct on that occasion the salvation of England depended; for if the Texel fleet had put to sea, and joined the Brest squadron during the mutiny at the Nore, where might now have been the British empire?

It was not without a violent struggle, and no small exertion, both of moral and physical courage, that the mutiny was suppressed, even in Duncan's own ship. Symptoms of insubordination had broken out in Yarmouth Roads when the other ships were dropping off to the Nore; and at length the crew mounted the rigging and gave three cheers, the well-known sign of mutiny. Duncan immediately ordered up the marines, who were perfectly steady, seized six of the mutineers, and called the whole ship's company on board. "My lads," said he, "I am not apprehensive of any violence you may exercise towards myself; I would far rather rule you by love than by fear: but I will, with my own hands, put to death the first person who shall venture to dispute my authority. Do you, sir," turning to one of the mutineers, "want to take the management of the ship out of my hands?" "Yes sir," replied the fellow. Duncan upon this, who had his sword drawn, raised it to plunge it in his breast; but the chaplain and secretary held his arm. The admiral upon this did not attempt to use the weapon, but addressing the ship's company with emotion, said, "Let those who will stand by me and my officers go to the starboard side of the ship, that we may see who are our friends and who are our enemies."—With one accord, the whole crew ran over except the six mutineers, who were left alone. They were immediately secured and put in irons; and with this crew, recently so rebellious, did this noble admiral proceed accompanied only by one ship of the line, the Adamant, to renew his station off the Texel. The mutineers soon evinced real repentance, and were let out by Duncan one by one; and never did a ship's company behave more nobly than the whole crew of the Venerable did, both in the blockade and at the battle of Camperdown. Such was Duncan's firmness; by such men it was at this vital crisis that the British empire was saved. Never in modern times was more courage combined with more gentleness; greater vigour with greater wisdom; purer patriotism with loftier religion; stronger professional genius with more elevated and devoted principle. If Great Britain, in her pacific and warlike administration, could reckon on a succession of such men as Collingwood and Duncan, she would indeed be immortal, for she would deserve immortality.

LORD NELSON.

Horatio Nelson, who bore so glorious a part in these engagements, was destined to leave a name immortal in the rolls of fame, was born at Burnam Thorpe, in the county of Norfolk, on the 29th September, 1758. He early evinced no decided a partiality for a sea life, that though of a feeble constitution, he was sent on ship-board at the age of thirteen. Subsequently he went on a voyage to the Greenland Seas, and distinguished himself as a subaltern, in various actions in the American war. Early in the revolutionary contest he was employed in the siege of Bastia, in the island of Corsica, which he reduced; a singular coincidence that the greatest leaders at land and sea in that struggle should first signalize themselves on the same island. After the battle of St Vincents, and the bombardment of Cadiz, he was sent on an expedition against the Island of Teneriffe, but though the attack, conducted with his wonted courage and skill, was at first successful, and the town for a short time was in the hands of the assailants, they were ultimately repulsed with the loss of 700 men, and Nelson's right arm.

Gifted by nature with undaunted courage, indomitable resolution, and undeceiving energy, Nelson was also possessed of the eagle glance, the quick determination, and coolness in danger, which constitute the rarest qualities of a consumate commander. Generous, open-hearted and enthusiastic, the whole energies of his soul were concentrated in the love of his country; like the youth in Tacitus, he loved danger itself, not the rewards of courage; and was incessantly consumed by that passion for great achievements, that sacred fire, which is the invariable characteristic of heroic minds. His whole life was spent in the service of his country; he annihilated the French navy, by following up the new system of tactics, plunging headlong into the enemy's fleet, and doubling upon a part of their line in the same manner as Napoleon practiced in battles at land. The history of the world has few characters so illustrious to exhibit, and few achievements as momentous to commemorate. If a veil could be drawn over the transactions at Naples, history would dwell upon him as a spotless hero; but justice requires that cruelty should never be palliated, and the rival of Napoleon shielded from none of the obloquy consequent on the fascination of female wickedness.

MARCHING TO DEATH.

The National Quarterly thus depicts a remarkable scene that occurred some years since on board a transport ship:

"The commander of the troops on board seeing that the vessel must soon sink, and that there was no hope of saving his men, drew them up in the order of battle, and as in the presence of a human enemy, bravely faced the doom that was before them. We know of no more impressive illustration of the power of military discipline in the presence of death:

"Look at that noble vessel on that high sea! She has sprung a leak. All the resources on board have been called into play for her release from the deep, but to no avail! The waters are gaining fast on her, beyond human control. She must sink! A regiment of brave, perfectly disciplined soldiers, are mustered on deck by a quick roll of the drum; officers and men promptly filled their rank and file, and shoulder arms. See them stand in seeried ranks, and completely accoutred for a long, long march. Not a mourning dirge, but the national anthem is played by the band. The regimental colors flutter in the air; the staff that supports them is as firm as the heart of the ensign that holds it. The array of battle is reflected in mournful appearance on the lowering clouds, which seem anxious to veil the waters, rippled by the breeze of death. Instinctively does the water leap over the bulwarks of the gallant and doomed ship, and down, down she goes The martial voice of the commander orders—'Present arms!' A rapid succession of orders is calmly given and calmly executed; the drum beats quicker and quicker; the muskets thump on deck at the last word of command; a splash at their fall, a surge of the invading waters, the drum is silenced, an army of bubbles swarm on the surface, and calm, and silent, and steady the last glare of the polished steel reflects a dying ray of mournful light."

DEATH OF THE WAR HORSE.

Very fine things have been said and painted about the death of the stag, the death of the boar, and kindred subjects, but much more terrible and impressive is the death of the war horse. The war steed is noble as he "paweth in the valley and rejoiceth in his strength!" He is fearful in the pride of his onset, snuffing and trampling like the White horse of Hengist in the front of the battle; and rushing with his rider through the fiery turmoil of the thundering fight!

"Neigh in thy pride, my courser brave—
Trample beneath thine hoof tyrant and slave!"

But he is most terrible in his grandeur as he "saith among the trumpets Ha! Ha!" his fury roused by a mortal stroke! When that young and gallant soldier, Col. Wm. H. Lytle, left Cincinnati at the head of the 10th Ohio regiment, certain of his friends presented him with a splendid black charger. That it was as fine a martial horse for martial purposes as ever reveled in the pastures of Ohio or old Kentucky, we were assured at the time, and we believed it, for we knew the man who selected him—a dealer fit to have bought and sold Bucephalus himself. This horse Col. Lytle rode in the late battle on the Gauley river, in Western Virginia, where Floyd defended his intrenchments until dark, and then fled with precipitation under cover of the night. There and there the noble black charger died "in harness," while his gallant rider fell before the enemy's cannonnade, stricken with a severe, but happily not mortal wound. "With ringing shout and bloody spur and saber flourished high," the Col. was leading on his valiant men to charge Floyd's intrenchment, when a shot struck his leg and passed through it into the body of his horse. Almost upon the parapet they were. The wounded leg had lost its clip, and with a mad bound into the air the steed threw its rider. Still with his front to the cannons of the foe, welling up life-blood and snorting with a frenzied fury, the war horse made another bound or two, cleared at one lass leap the parapet of the intrenched camp, and falling, died inside.

The foe, with boundless admiration at the chivalrous courage of the man, thought they had killed him; and then dividing his pistols and accoutrements among their officers, lamented the death of his gallant black horse.—Wilkes' Spirit.

A DOCTOR'S LUCK.

A wealthy lady had a tickling in her throat, and thought that a bristle of her tooth-brush had gone down and lodged in her gullet. Her throat daily grew worse. It was badly inflamed, and she sent for the family doctor. He examined it carefully, and finally assured her that nothing was the matter; it was a mere nervous delusion, he said. Still her throat troubled her, and she became so much alarmed that she was sure she should die. A friend suggested that she should call in Dr. Jones, a young man just commencing practice. She did not at first like the idea, but finally consented and Dr. Jones was called. He was a person of good address and polite manners. He looked carefully at her throat, asked her several questions as to the sensation at the seat of the alarming malady, and finally announced that he thought he could relieve her. On his second visit he brought with him a delicate pair of forceps, in the teeth of which he had inserted a bristle taken from an ordinary tooth-brush. The rest can be imagined. The lady threw back her head; the forceps were introduced into her mouth; a pick—a loud scream! and all was over; and the young physician with a smiling face was holding up to the light and inspecting with lively curiosity, the extracted bristle. The patient was in raptures. She immediately recovered her health and spirits, and went about everywhere sounding the praises of "her savior," as she persisted in calling the dexterous operator. So enthusiastic was her gratitude, that she offered him her hand in marriage and her noble fortune.—The fact that the young doctor was married formed an insuperable obstacle to this arrangement. But the lady's influence and constant laudations of the physician procured for him a lucrative practice.

KNOUTED TO DEATH.

On the 28th ultimo three men were executed at St. Petersburg, Russia, by the Knout—or rather, say they were flogged, and died under the process, the punishment of death having no place in the code of Russia. The victims were murderers and robbers, and were soldiers on furlough—a set who, it would seem, furnish the greater number of the worst criminals in Russia.—They were submitted to 80 and 90 lashes respectively.

SWEARING.

The absurdity and utter folly of swearing is admirably set forth in the following anecdote of Beelzebub and his imps. The latter went out in the morning, each to command his set of men, one the murderers, another the liars, and another the swearers, &c., &c. At evening they stopped at the mouth of a cave. The question arose who commanded the meanest set of men. The subject was debated at length but without coming to a decision. Finally his Satanic Majesty was called upon to decide the matter in dispute. Whereupon he said:—The murderer got something for killing, the thief for stealing, the liar for lying, but the swearer was the meanest of all, he served without pay. They were his Majesty's best subjects; for while they were costless their name was legion and presented the largest division in his (Satan's) employ.

A GOOD REGIMENT.

One chaplain gives the following account of his regiment: "Colonel Van Cleave is our commander. He is a member of the Old school Presbyterian Church. He allows no drilling among the soldiers upon the Sabbath. We have preaching each Sabbath morning at ten o'clock; a Bible-class at three o'clock, p. m.; a prayer and conference meeting on Sabbath and Thursday evenings; prayers every evening at dress parade, when every officer takes off his cap, and reading Scriptures and prayers every day in the hospital. Many of our soldiers are pious. Our meetings are all well attended. Better social meetings I have never seen. I find myself in a missionary field. Every soldier is furnished with the Scriptures."—N. Y. Presbyterian.

☞ A soldier, who was once wounded in battle, set up a terrible bellowing. An Irishman who by near him with both legs shot off, immediately sang out, 'Bad luck to the like of ye; do you think nobody is kilt but yerself.'

☞ A country paper says: "Our account of the thunder-storm last week contained a slight error—instead of hailstones as large as 'pullets,' read 'bullets.'"

☞ "Och!" said Paddy, I'll never be able to put on these boots until I wear them two or three weeks.

☞ To cure deafness tell a man you've come to pay him money. It beats acoustic oil all hollow.

☞ Young ladies are like arrows—they are all in a quiver till the beaux come, and can't go off without them.

POSSIBILITY OF WAR WITH THE UNITED STATES.

From the London Times.

We do not think our government can be justly charged, even by an enthusiastic Canadian, with remissness as to our position in this province with regard to civil war in America. We support a considerable fleet in the Western waters of the Atlantic; we have reinforced to some extent the troops in our American colonies; we have sent an expedition to Mexico, which, though dispatched for a different object, might be useful in case its services were required elsewhere; and, should it be necessary, we have other ships and other troops with which to reinforce our present armaments. For a power whose objects are entirely pacific, we have been kept back in the display of our resources. If any one has been inclined to think we have done too much, a consideration of Mr. Seward's recent circular on the fortification of the lakes and the coasts will probably convince him of his mistake. We have long had the authority of the American Secretary of State for saying that he has his eye on Canada, and our belief is not at all weakened by his endeavour to persuade us that Canada has her eye on him. The same reason that made Mr. Seward threaten us with an attack now makes him pretend to apprehend one; and that reason is no other than the wish to storm up for use, if required, a plausible ground of quarrel.

We imagine that the reason on which this desire to quarrel is founded must be something of the kind: Should the North find herself able to conquer the South she will be left with a large army on her hands difficult to keep up, and very possibly dangerous to discharge; and in such a case how could it be employed better than in indemnifying the North for the checks and mortifications of a protracted civil war by a sudden and brilliant attack upon the possessions of Great Britain, as a punishment for the innumerable offences of which she has been accused during the course of the struggle? If, on the other hand, the North should see there was little chance of subduing the South, a quarrel with England might be exceedingly agreeable as a consolation to wounded pride, and upon our interference, and not upon the inadequacy of the resources of the Republic, might be thrown the blame of failure in the attempt to reconquer the Union by force of arms. We do not doubt our forefathers derived similar satisfaction from the interference of France on behalf of the American Colonies, and preferred to attribute their defeat to the arms of their old and gallant adversary, rather than to the powers of their own revolted colonies.

We now turn to the North American Colonies to express the hope that the same circumstance which have forced upon us the belief in the necessity of adequate preparation will not be lost upon them. The security of a too happy time, and the absorbing occupations created by a vast material prosperity, have somewhat laid to sleep the mental energies of our North American Colonies. That formidable militia, so gloriously distinguished in so many bloody and successful encounters, has been till lately allowed to fall almost into abeyance. While the United States have been perpetually playing at soldiers, the English colonies have been content to look on at exhibitions of citizen soldiership which they did not admire and had not the slightest wish to emulate. Canada is not, like the United States a country of generals and colonels. Besides our own policy of keeping a considerable number of regular troops in Canada has tended much to discourage the martial spirit of the people, and to render them averse from doing that for themselves which the mother country is willing to do for them.—We believe that this apathy no longer exists. It did not require the recent unfortunate occurrences to convince Canadians that they were better off as a dependency of the British Crown than as members of the American Union. In Canada, we believe there does not exist the slightest wish to secede. Government by ministers responsible to themselves, being at liberty to spend their own money and make their own laws, the Canadians enjoy all the advantages of a Republic without the dangers and discords of a Federation, and all the advantages of being members of a great Empire without being called upon to contribute to Imperial burdens. If these things are worth having they are worth protecting. The Colonial Empire of the Queen of England is not held together by the same tenure as the American Confederation. We have endeavored to make it a union of mutual good will and regard, not force. The troops that we maintain in the American Colonies are there not to prevent the colonies from rising against the mother country, of which we have not the slightest apprehension, but to assist in protecting them against the attacks of a foreign power. We learned from the American contest of the last century that good will was the only tenure by which colonies are worth preserving. Strange that those who taught us this lesson should entirely fail in applying it to their own case and consider it "humiliating and exasperating" when we ask them to use for themselves those doctrines which they have the merit of being the first to inculcate.

The North American Colonies must feel that upon themselves lies the burden of their own defence, and we cannot doubt that they will respond to the necessities of the time in a manner worthy of their former well-earned reputation. There is no doubt that by the establishment of volunteers England has already reaped great advantages, and that her diplomatic position in the face of Europe has been strengthened. Credit has been confirmed and commerce invigorated by the confidence with which this domestic force has inspired us, and every man who has shouldered a rifle in the volunteer movement has a right to consider himself as not least among the benefactors of his country. Precisely the same effect as regards her position and prospects would the training to arms of the youth and manhood of Canada produce. The race that fells her forests and cultivates her rich clearings is destined as assuredly to play no insignificant part in the future history of the American Continent. The severe continent with which they contend braces their energies and develops their strength. Their short summers does not enervate them; their long winters gives them those habits of robust and athletic exercise in which the born and bred American is often so sadly deficient. Let it be known that a hundred thousand of the militia of Canada, well drilled, well armed, and well accoutred are ready for her defence, and no other defence would be required. It does not need much foresight to perceive that, unless the North can terminate the contest by a sudden and decisive blow, the probability of which is growing less and less every day, the state of affairs is likely to become considerably complicated. The war fell upon the United States so suddenly, and its continuance even now has been too short, that its real tendencies have not yet had time to develope themselves. The contest still retains the form originally impressed upon it—that of a great duel between the North and South; but, once give time for the full effect of the process of disintegration, and it is pretty sure to be found that there are numerous other elements of bickering and dissension besides which exist between the present belligerents. The United States must be very different from all other Confederacies if the interests in its preservation is equal to the interests of all its members,—if in its vast territory there are no sectional local jealousies; no provincial aspirations for independence, no concealed but virulent repulsion. Let the conflict continue a year longer, and we may not unreasonably expect to see three or four rival Confederacies and a complicated state of political relations of which we cannot at present form an idea. This uncertain future requires that our colonies should put themselves in a position in which they may be able to maintain themselves steadily and impassable amid whatever change and violence may be passing around them.

CANADA AND WAR.

(From the Times, Dec. 2.)

When there was yet no cloud between us and the Anglo Saxons of America the Minister of the Northern Republic issued instructions to the people near the Canadian frontier to put themselves in readiness for a war with England. Europe read the circular with great surprise. No preparation could in our eyes be more unnecessary, no suggestion of danger could be more absurd. The wildest insanity on the other side of the Atlantic could scarcely dream that England was about to take advantage of civil disorder to invade Maine or New York or Michigan, and the most likely apprehensions on this side of the Atlantic could scarcely conceive that the rulers of the warring States in the North had determined still further to complicate their position by a wilful quarrel with England.—Yet it would now appear that Mr. Seward's warning was not necessarily so absurd as it then appeared. If he had already despaired of reconquering the long tributary South, and had determined to retire from the contest amid the conflagration of a European war, or if he had conceived the policy of seeking an indemnity for the loss of the Southern States by absorbing the British possessions, then there was at least some method in his madness. It might be, and we believe it would be, the most silly and unstatesmanlike design ever conceived by a minister; but such a resolve would point at least to a settled course of future action.—The Minister who had such a policy in his mind knew what was to come. He knew that he was about to force a quarrel with England, and he could therefore already indicate where the struggle would necessarily be hottest.

We may be wrong in attributing a coherent policy to so incoherent a personage as Mr. Seward. We may have some hope that his early call for preparations was only intended to answer some momentary purpose at home, and that we shall not be obliged to recognize in the next acts of Mr. Lincoln's Government the steps of a predetermined resolve to have a war with England. One fact, however, seems to be pretty certain. If Canada had not been a British possession there would have been no reviling of England, and no outrages committed on the British flag. If the Northern mind had been completely concentrated upon the conquest of the Southern Republic, it would not in mere lightness of heart have sought to call into the contest the most powerful ally which the South ern Republic could find in the world. It is impossible to understand that the manufacturing States of the North, greedy of monopolies, and believing that their existence depends upon closed markets and forced customers, may cast their eyes abroad for other tributary populations of buyers to replace those who are escaping from their power; but it is not possible to believe that without an object of this kind they could choose this moment to proclaim the approach of a state of war. If the Government of the Federal States had conceived the design of abandoning the South and seeking an indemnity in the conquest of Canada, they would have acted just as they have with regard to the South. They would have strengthened their Northern frontier, they would have used every effort to excite their population against England, they would have sown seeds of jealousy and hostility between the two countries, they would have commenced a series of aggressions which no country can endure without losing its self-respect and its consideration among its equals, and they would have chosen for their aggressions a period of the year when the coveted territory is cut off by climate from the assistance of the mother country.

If, therefore, when there was no apparent reason for the counsel, the American Minister was right in calling upon the frontier States to put on their armour, how much more need is there that we should now call upon the Canadians to be up and ready to receive a foe! If there be danger at all that danger is imminent. The design has been formed to annex them as tributaries to Pennsylvania and New York, the attempt will be prompt. They may be assured that in that case the next fire months of ice will not be allowed to pass without some endeavor on the part of their aggressive neighbours. During those five months, at least, their existence as an integral community must depend upon themselves. It is our duty, and we shall not shrink from it if the occasion should unhappily arise, to aid them with the whole power of this country. To punish their invaders we are almost omnipotent. We can sweep the Federal fleet from the seas, we can blockade the Atlantic cities; but we cannot garrison and hold 350,000 square miles of country. That must be done by the Canadians themselves. They have done it before when they were a smaller population and a divided people. They have done it before when they were a dependency of Great Britain, and were not, as they are now, in all but in name an independent nation. They have now every incentive to defend themselves. They are not only a self-governing people, but they are in race, in traditions, and in material interests distinct from the people who would seek to conquer them. If anything were required to unite them in one firm array, it would be an attack from Maine and New York. And these men of Canada can fight. They have an excellent Militia, they have among them the nucleus of a good regular force, they have ample stores, and they have, what is not to be despised, recollections of victory in former contests against the same enemies.—They have always hitherto proved themselves more than a match for any force which the United States, even when they were really united States, could bring against them. They will only have to meet a force [illegible] with their own. Their invaders will be [illegible] veterans who have stood victorious upon well-won fields, but at the best militia-men, like themselves. Perhaps they may even be renegades from Bull's Run, plunderers in Virginia, or luckly fugitives from Lexington or Leesburg. A population of a million and a half ought to be able to give a hundred thousand drilled militiamen to defend their frontier, and another hundred thousand volunteers for temporary duty. We, like them, were, or thought ourselves to be, in immediate danger; and our present volunteer force shows how we understood our position, and how we rose to meet it. What we have done at home Canada must do in her homes.—For their internal defences she must rely upon herself. Montreal is, no doubt, at this season a vulnerable point. It is unfortunate that our timorous or unskilful diplomacy in 1842 drew the boundary of the two nations so near to this capital city; but Montreal wants stout hearts and zealous hands to be safe until the season returns, when we can make it secure against any assailants. The only danger that can prove fatal either to Montreal or any other point of the frontier is lest Canada should rely too much on us and too little upon herself.

We address this call to our fellow-subjects on the other side of the Atlantic because we believe that they are fully as hearty in their desire to remain united with us as we can be to see them so united. While they are loyal to England it is England's duty to aid in their defence against all who may attack them, and to accept any quarrel which may be forced upon us by reason of our union. Of course, we should never think of undertaking the defence of half a continent of discontented or hostile inhabitants. We have nothing to gain from the Canadians, we force no imports upon them; we ask for no monopolies in their markets; we derive no revenue from them; we impose no taxes upon them. Our Union is more free and disinterested than can ever be companionship between father and son. They would not be worth a dollar less to us were they to morrow the tributaries of the Northern Republic or the members of an independent State. At present they have all the advantages of an independence with the protection of the most powerful maritime country in the world. If they value this, they must show themselves worthy of it. Of course, it is not certain that war will arise. The Northern Republic may have even anticipated our demand. Even if she refuse it, some now unseen escape may possibly be found from the dilemma of war or dishonour. The wise course, however, for Canada will be to prepare. Let her at once discipline her militia and emulate the mother country in drilling a Volunteer army.

TWO DESERTERS FROM THE 100TH REGIMENT SHOT BY A COLOURED MAN.

Exciting Chase on the Lake.

Two privates belonging to the 100th Regiment, named respectively Hickler and Swellinger, and who have only been in Her Majesty's service about a couple of weeks, took it into their heads to attempt to desert and go over to the Yankees yesterday, but were brought back to their allegiance in a somewhat peculiar manner, "and thereby hangs a tale." A little coloured boy named Tom Woods has, it appears, been in the habit of frequenting the quarters of the men of the 100th, and doing "odd chores" for which he received payment in rations. He is somewhat of a favorite among the men, being active and obliging. Yesterday he was requested by the privates above mentioned to go down town and hire a boat as they wished to sail over to the Island.—He did so, and the men left in the boat. When they reached the island they encountered two fishmen, namely, Martin Mellon and Robert Barry, the latter a coloured man. The soldiers informed them of their wish to desert, saying, "They have been too long in Canada," and wished the fishermen to exchange garments with them.—This, bosh positively refused to do, and advised them to return to Toronto. Barry, however, treated them with much kindness and invited them to visit his hut, where they partook of supper. Here they made another proposal to exchange the boat they had rented for a sail boat loaded with herrings, and anchored in the lake, close to the beach, saying that they could cross to Rochester in it. This he very naturally refused to do, and the men left the hut, Barry being under the impression that they were about to return to the Fort. This was about nine o'clock in the evening, and the moon was shining brightly. Barry's astonishment may be imagined when, on looking out of the door a short time afterwards, he observed the sail-boat, with the two men on board, some distance out into the Lake, and apparently under way for Yankee land. He instantly summoned Mellon and Patrick Gray, who has charge of the Island fishing for Mrs. Durney, and manning a boat set off in pursuit. Before going on board Barry, who is a strong, powerful man and a good shot, loaded his gun with duck-shot, and laid it down in the bow of the boat to be ready for any emergency. He then seized the bow oar, Mellon the stern one, while Gray used a paddle to steer with and facilitate their progress. "A stern chase" is proverbially a "long one," and on this occasion the fugitives were favored with a fair wind. They hoisted both sails on board the boat and sat at their ease, while their pursuers had to "go in on their muscle." After a most exciting chase, which lasted about 2 hours, and when both boats were between 6 and 7 miles from land, the wind suddenly fell, and the sail were seen to flap against the masts. This was the signal for renewed vigour on the part of the three pursuers, and they soon were within hailing distance. "Heave to," lustily shouted Barry; but instead of replying an attempt was made to get the sail-boat on another tack as the wind was refreshening. Finding that this summons to surrender was not likely to be attended to, and fearing the men would escape with the boat, he picked up his musket and fired a shot right on board. Both men were seen to fall into the bottom of the boat, and the pursuers were soon alongside. On making enquiry they found that Swellinger had been shot in the face and Hickler in the right breast, neither however, being dangerously wounded. A long and steady pull brought them to the Old Fort with the prisoners some time after midnight, and finding Lieut. Nagel, of the 30th Regiment, to be the officer on duty, they related to him the particulars of the capture, and handed over the prisoners, who were taken into the guard-house, where their wounds were dressed.—Mellon and Barry then surrendered themselves to answer any charge that might be brought against them. Gray had landed on the island. Lieut. Nagel despatched one of his men to Queen street Police station, and, a constable arriving, they were taken to the station. As the deserters had been severely, although not dangerously, wounded, they were conveyed to the hospital. Mellon and Barry appeared before the Police Magistrate yesterday and were remanded, but admitted to bail on their own recognizances, a note having been received from the Regimental Surgeon that the wounded men might not be able to appear in court for two or perhaps three weeks. Gray also surrendered himself at the afternoon, and was also admitted to bail. It is reported by the men belonging to the 100th that Hickler and Swellinger have both been seen making sketches of the fortifications now in progress, within the last few days, and that both have received a good education. Swellinger was charged by one of the non-commissioned officers, the other day, with being an American, but this he denied. No doubt the full particulars about these latter points will come out when the Magistrate investigates the case.—Globe.

Death of Prince Albert.

The Persia which left Europe on the 15th brings the sad intelligence of the death of the Prince Consort. The telegram from Newfoundland says, that "his Royal Highness Prince Albert died at noon on the 15th." Though father and son are severally Prince Albert, the latter is generally spoken of as the Prince of Wales leaving it pretty certain that it is the Prince Consort.

We are certain there is not a British heart but will feel grieved to its core at hearing of the melancholy tidings. We feel for the Royal Family at this very painful bereavement,—more especially for our beloved Queen whose heart will bleed afresh at this severe stroke; and we devoutly pray the Great Being who rules over all, may bind up the wound thus made, and support our beloved Monarch in this the hour of her severe affliction.

THE MEETING ON TUESDAY.

OVER 500 PERSONS PRESENT.

GREAT ENTHUSIASM!

Shortly after 2 o'clock on Tuesday, the Town Hall was filled with people from the Townships as well as from the Town. Mr. Dennistoun stated that he had been commissioned by Sheriff Hall to offer an apology to the meeting of his inability to attend, owing to the serious indisposition of some members of his family in Toronto, causing him to leave town by the 2:30 train. On motion of Mr. Dennistoun, seconded by Mr. Conger, Charles Perry, Esq., Mayor of the Town, was called to the Chair, and Mr. J Edwards was appointed Secretary.

The Chairman read the Requisition to the Sheriff and his reply calling the meeting, after which Lieut. Col. Wallis moved the first resolution as follows:

Resolved—That this meeting desires to express its devotion and loyalty to the British Crown and its deep regret at the outrage committed upon the National Flag by Captain Wilkes, of the American war steamer San Jacinto, on the 8th of November last, in forcibly taking from the British mail packet Trent the Southern Commissioners, Messrs. Slidell and Mason, at the time they were pursuing their journey between neutral ports, an act for which the honor and independence of this nation demand full reparation.

Mr. Wallis said he was surrounded by able gentlemen more capable of addressing them than himself; he would not, therefore, attempt to make a speech. He was glad to see so many assembled, and the enthusiasm manifested on this occasion.

Lieut. Col. Haultain, in seconding the resolution, said he rose amidst feelings of regret and gratification—regret that we should be called together by the unhappy affair of an outrage recently offered to the British flag, at the same time it afforded him gratification that such an unanimity of feeling of manfully vindicating the honor of Britain by the loyal inhabitants of this this county. The thought of war at all times is sad, but a war with the American people is peculiarly so—sprung from the same stock as ourselves, of the same language and religion. Their forms of government, though somewhat different, are very similar to our own, and hence it is that a war with such a people is to be deprecated. As a man, as a patriot, and as a Christian he deprecated it. But it is not to be forgotten that during the Crimean war the American people manifested unprovoked hostilites to Britain, rejoicing in any defeat or difficulty she endured, and now in the case of Commander Wilkes, who committed the outrage on our flag, it was painful to behold as we have done the praises heaped upon him by the authorities at Washington. He (Col. H.) did not approve of encouraging a temporary excitement in reference to war. War at all times is dreadful, and it was painful to contemplate its fearful consequences.—Should this war which now threatens us go on many a family will lose its head and its ornament. At the same time, with the present aspect of affairs, he considered it the duty of every man, with such disastrous consequences before us, to meet the difficulty fairly. The resolution speaks of the regret that this outrage has been committed, and he (Col. H.) regretted it as much as any man can do; and if matters should transpire that the honor of Britain would be at stake, he was sure that every man present, and every loyal man in the county, would do everything in their power to prevent anything like the severance of that connection now so happily existing between this Province and the Mother Country. It was but right to look the matter of war fairly in the face; none but cowards are afraid to do so. He had computed the cost of maintaining the companies of 75 each which were now called out, as well as the cost of a field battery of artillery for a year, and it was a considerable amount. Our country, as is known, is burdened with a heavy debt; but the honor of the country must be maintained, should it cost seventy millions more, and he was satisfied that every man would not only sanction the cost, but pledge his own purse besides. It will be supposed that he, as an old soldier would be, like the war horse, off at the first sound of the bugle. Were he 20 years younger he might do so; as it was he was ready to do anything he could in the good cause.

Lieutenant Colonel Strickland moved the second resolution:

Resolved,—That in view of the probability of a war between England and the United States, arising from the outrage mentioned in the first resolution, this meeting is impressed with the greatness of the responsibility resting on the Canadian Government in calling out and organizing the militia of the Province, to be ready for active service at a days notice, and expresses their confidence in the immediate formation of such measures, and such efficient checks, as a duty immediately upon the loyal community of the country.

In 1837 when the Rebellion broke out in Canada 400 men were mustered in a short time in this very town—then scarcely a village—and these were ready in five hours to march off. They left their homes and families to defend their country. He was sure they would be equally successful in raising volunteers now; he addressed no loyal a body of men now as was then; he did not desire war, he fully agreed with Col. Haultain in this respect, but if an insult is offered to the British flag that has "for a thousand years braved the battle and the breeze," every loyal man will feel it his duty to resent that insult. He wished he were a few years younger; sixty years had nearly gone over him and he felt physically their effects; but, nevertheless, the heart is willing though the flesh is weak. He was happy to see before him the hoar head and brow of the country, ready and willing he was sure, to resent the insult. If the war goes on as it is likely to do we shall require more than the seventy-five men now asked for, and he was satisfied that plenty of volunteers will be forthcoming. He held to the old maxim that one volunteer was worth two pressed men—yes, worth twenty.

Mr. Conger seconded the resolution. He expressed his regret that anything should transpire to cause a war, but if such a calamity should occur there will be plenty of willing hands to defend the country. The mother country is willing and ready to help us, but still we have a deal to do ourselves. Although somewhat advanced in years he had not lost the fire of a true Canadian. He remembered that in 1812, when the whole population of Upper Canada was not much more than double that of the United Counties of Peterborough and Victoria, General Hull with his army were met and repulsed by the Canadians then, and the same spirit that drove him across, will do it again. He did not agree with those who feared the cost of life and treasure. He remembered the insults of the Americans when in 1837 they left open all their arsenals along the frontier to assist those joining in the rebellion. We did not then call on them for redress, and now because we do not sympathize publicly with them we are denounced and traduced.

Lieut. Colonel Dennistoun moved the third resolution:

Resolved,—That this meeting in view of the critical position of affairs, is of opinion that the whole resources of the Province should be pledged to the maintenance of the honor of the mother country, and the connection between Canada and Great Britain, now so happily existing, and hereby solemnly promises to sustain the Canadian authorities in any necessary steps they may take to that end.

It was expected he should address the meeting from his position and rank. He was old enough to deprecate war and to know something of its sad consequences. With all this he felt that when the national flag—as had been so eloquently alluded to by a former speaker—is insulted that we show ourselves as worthy descendants of our forefathers who were Britons. He was confident that we were able to meet any foe. Though not remembering like Mr Conger the events of 1812 he has read about them. The population of Canada then was not 175,000, and although the army specially elected to take Canada numbered as many as there were souls in the country, including women and children, they were driven back by the yeomanry then in the country. Now that we number three millions what fear need we entertain of again driving back an invading foe. As to the cost we would not be Britons if we did not cheerfully meet it. He was willing to do all in his power, and he wished it understood that he should personally command his batallion.

Lieut. Colonel Wigmore seconded the resolution and expressed his readiness and willingness to turn out in defence of his country now as he had done in 1837.

Mr. Thos. White, jr., was called on to support the resolution, and alluded to the importance of prompt action from the fact of our very extended frontier, and difficulties of getting assistance from England during winter. Was glad to hear that the officers were to command in person, and hoped the young would come readily forward and volunteer.

On motion of Col. Dennistoun, seconded by Captain Poole, the Mayor left the chair and Cap. Rubidge occupied it, when a vote of thanks was passed for the Mayor's conduct in the chair. Three cheers were given for the Queen.

As the people were going out Mr. T. White, Jun., called for order, while he read the mournful news just arrived by telegraph, that Prince Albert, our beloved Queen's Consort, was dead. The news spread a gloom upon the whole assembly.—The Mayor was called again to the chair, when Captain Rubidge, seconded by Col. Dennistoun, moved a resolution of condolence to our beloved Queen, at this sad calamity.

On motion of Mr. T. White, Jun., and seconded by Mr. Conger, the following gentlemen were appointed a committee to prepare and forward an expression of sympathy to Her Majesty, in accordance with the resolution, viz: Capt. Rubidge, Rev. Vincent Clementi, and Lieut-Col. Dennistoun.

The meeting then broke up sorry and sad.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

Peterboro is not behind the other Towns in the Volunteer movement. Rifle Company No. 1 is nearly filled; No. 2 has been organized, and from the men who are in the lead in its organisation, we expect a good Company.

We understand that about forty names have been enrolled for a Cavalry company.

There is a willingness expressed by many to join an Artillery Company, under Col. Haultain, if the guns can be had from Government. We understand application has been made for a battery of guns.

SYMPATHY WITH THE SOUTH.

The Montreal Witness in a recent number asks the question "What are the reasons for the bitter feelings of the Canadian Government organs towards the United States?" and then goes on to give several answers to the query. It notices the fact that whilst these organs are hostile to the Northern States, they manifest a warm sympathy with the South. It supposes that something of a fellow feeling on the part of our Government has to do with the sympathy shown towards the people now in open rebellion to the constituted Government of their country.

Another reason given, certainly "less objectionable" is that the South has since the rebellion broke out not only been civil to Britain but has sought her good-will and assistance, whilst the North has manifested a bitter feeling to Britain, and has apparently sought an opportunity to quarrel with her.

Another reason is supposed to arise from the envy and rivalry consequent upon proximity, as was the case in England and France years ago.

The chief reason assigned is the one found in the management of the Grand Trunk. While it was building, and whilst assistance was being offered by the Government, the parties engaged in the operations were enriched thereby, but now that further advances are hopeless, new lines are proposed as the extension of the present line to Halifax. As this can only be effected by Imperial help, no time offers so favorably as in a prospect of war, as at present,—hence to effect the object in view it is important to keep up a war feeling, to induce the authorities at home, as well as Parliament here, to pass the necessary measures for the proposed extension.

All or any or some of the above reasons may have to do with the feeling manifested so conspicuously by the Ministerial press,—the fact is patent to all that an unwarranted hostility of feeling is kept up against the Northern people, which is being reciprocated by them, all of which tends to cherish the war spirit unfortunately rampant here as well as there.

We may and we ought to prepare for the worst, and in doing so it is a prudent maxim to "keep ourselves cool, and our powder dry."

THE MAYORALTY.

Mr. Perry was the only candidate nominated, on Monday. He was elected by acclamation.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

We learn with much regret that a serious accident occurred at a thrashing bee on the farm of Mr. James McKeown, Smith, on Wednesday, the 18th inst., the particulars of which are as follow:

It appears that Miss Elizabeth Baptie, in company with a number of other young girls, went out to see the thrashing machine at work; and in order more closely to observe its operations, they placed themselves in very close proximity to the dangerous machine. The men who were working it cautioned them against coming too near, but the girls thought there was no danger. Miss Baptie was just about leaving, and had turned round, when her dress was caught by the tumbling shafts, which, revolving with great velocity, soon dragged her down, and before the machine had been stopped she had passed under the shafts 4 or 5 times. As soon as she was extricated, it was discovered that the thigh bone of one leg was broken, and the other leg mutilated in a horrible manner, it being broken at the knee, the knee cap twisted round to the back of the leg, and the bones protruding from the flesh about two inches. Drs. Burnham, Harrey, Pringle and McKeown were in immediate attendance; but owing to a difference of opinion among the doctors, a delay followed, during which time the poor girl must have suffered intense agony. Some of the doctors considered amputation necessary, but the unfortunate girl objected to this. After some time, by the aid of chloroform, the doctors were enabled to dress and bandage up the wounds, much to the relief of the sufferer. It is thought that with great care and the best medical assistance she will recover, though it is not expected that she will ever have the proper use of her limbs.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The following articles have been crowded out, but will make their appearance in our next:

Address to Miss Clarke, and Reply.

A Poem, by Heffie.

An Enigma.

We have respectfully to decline the communication of "Vox Veritatis." We do not think we would be justified in publishing his letter, as it would probably open up the old sore of the Baptist controversy, of which we were heartily tired ere it closed. Under other circumstances we would willingly publish the letter.

SOIREE.—A Soiree, under the auspices of the "Intellectual Improvement Society" will be held in the Town Hall, North Monaghan, on Wednesday (New Year's) evening. Tea to be served at 4 o'clock.

☞We wish our readers all a very merry Christmas, and many returns of the season.

☞A very pleasant, as well as successful, Soiree was held in the Presbyterian Church, Springville, last evening. The object was to pay off a debt on the Church glebe, and, if numbers would do it, the object has been fully met; there were between 400 and 500 persons present. Addresses were delivered by several reverend gentlemen, and the Peterboro Free Church choir, under the leadership of Mr. Graham, sung several delightful pieces of music.—The Springville folk understand well how to make an agreeable social gathering.

☞A circular has been issued by the Scottish Provincial Life Assurance Company, intimating that policies on lives do not become invalidated by the holder entering as a volunteer. This is a great advantage to the insured, and an inducement for those who are not, to become so. Should the bugle call to arms, and the Volunteer have to do battle in defence of his country, it would be a great satisfaction to him to think that in the worst emergency his family would not be left penniless on the world.

THE BRITISH AMERICAN JOURNAL.

We have received the December number of this excellent Journal, and regret to find that its discontinuance depends upon the response made by its subscribers during the current month. We also regret to observe that no medical gentleman in Peterboro' are down on the list of subscribers We see the name of G. M. D. Pringle, Cornwall, which may be our Dr. Pringle.

How our medical men can be without so excellent a work we do not know. It is an invaluable work for any one to peruse. We sincerely hope that the medical faculty throughout the Province will arouse themselves, and not allow so excellent a Journal devoted chiefly for their benefit to go down for want of support.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMERICA.

HALIFAX, Dec. 21.

The Royal Mail steamship America, from Liverpool 7th, via Queenstown 8th, for New York, put in here at six this morning, short of coal.

She has 45 passengers for New York. She will sail at about ten o'clock.

Warlike sentiments and preparations in England were unabated.

A large anti-war meeting had, however, been held at Dublin.

LATEST.

The British Government has sent a letter approving of the course of Commander Williams, mail agent on board the Trent.

Breadstuffs steady. Provisions firm.—Consols 89¼ to 90 for money.

Paris papers assert that the British Government in answer to the petitions from the manufacturing districts stated that the cotton ports would be open by February at the latest.

The Countess Canning, wife of the Governor General of India, died in Calcutta on the 18th Nov.

The British Parliament has been prorogued till the 7th of January.

It was stated that orders for the purchase of half a million quarter of wheat had been sent to the Black Sea ports, from London, within the last few days, for present and future use.

The British frigate Warrior was taking in 760 tons coal, preparatory to service on the North American coast.

A considerable number of additional English troops were to be sent to Canada.

The Constitutionel, Patrie, Debats, and several other French journals, say that France will remain neutral in the event of a war between England and the United States.

The Hero, carrying 86 guns, was to leave Portsmouth on the 8th inst., for the North American coast.

The ship Silas Greenman for New York having 100 tons of lead on board was stopped in the river Thames, the export of the article having been prohibited.

In London, in reference to the important question of the attitude likely to be assumed be France, the opinion continues to be that however desirous the Emperor might be to give some employment to his navy, and to divert public attention in France from the state of the French finances, he is not likely to do anything to cause a difference with the British Government, because serious results might follow in France if distrust there should increase and cause a further depression in trade.

The London Globe warns its readers that they must take the French version of the dispatches sent to Lord Lyons for what it is worth, and purely as the French idea of them.

The Shipping Gazette has an article on the question of our open supplies in the event of a war with North America. It does not regard their future prospects with a feeling of alarm.

The effort of the war feeling upon American shipping interests is already most disastrous. No charters are now taken for these vessels, and as for passengers and cargoes little or nothing is doing. Such is the state of affairs in this respect that no insurances of this class have been taken at Lloy's for several days past.

The following troops at Aldershot are ordered to be in readiness to proceed to Canada:—Leslie's 6th battery of royal artillery; the 2nd battalion of the 22nd regiment; the 3rd battalion of the 45th regiment, and a detachment of the 16th regiment of Lancers. The battery attached to this force served in the Crimean war, and is furnished with Armstrong guns.

C. L. Gorden, of the Royal Engineers is ordered to be in readiness to proceed to Canada in the Melbourne.

A large force of engineers, it is stated, will be immediately sent to Canada. 100-pound Armstrong guns are now being rapidly distributed among the ships preparing for sea. The Defence an iron plated frigate is to have a crew of 450 men. She will be manned with the least difficulty.—The Canada steamers Australasia and Persia are to convey troops to Halifax.—The screw steamer Orpheus, carrying 2 guns, called last evening at Plymouth Sound, whence she is to convey the screw transport Melbourne with troops, arms and stores, to the St. Lawrence or Halifax.

The London Herald says that the first battalion of the rifle brigade now stationed at Dublin, and the first battalion of the 16th regiment stationed at Sheffield, received orders yesterday to embark. The naval editor of the London Times states that although we are strong in large ships, the class of vessels which would be of the greatest service to us in a war with the United States are the Corvettes and Sloops, a great number of which require heavy repairs before they would be fit for sea.

The greatest activity has prevailed since Saturday last at the Tower of London.—The whole of the workmen and laborers employed in the various departments there have been engaged from early in the morning until a late hour at night in packing up fire arms and every kind of articles necessary for active service abroad. On Sunday last the interior of the ancient garrison presented an unusual and bustling appearance, in consequence of an order which had been received from the officials of the war office to prepare for the immediate transmission of 75,000 stand of arms, which were packed in boxes containing 30 rifles each, with the usual adjuncts. The men worked tard the whole of Sunday in packing, and the same night eight barges were filled with boxes, which were conveyed to Woolwich for shipment to Quebec and other places in Canada.

On Monday evening a similar amount of arms was conveyed to Woolwich, and on Wednesday preparations were being made for the transmission of every kind of munitions of war down the river in barges and other crafts, which were conveyed by steam tugs to the several government depots, where orders had been received to forward without delay every kind of defensive muniments. Additional hands have been engaged daily in the various departments of the Tower, which has not witnessed such a bustle

The military immediately available in Canada may be stated at 30,000 which may be increased to 200,000.

It has been stated that a batallion of the guard is under orders for embarkation.

It is reported that the Government will charter the City of New York, as well as the new steamers coming round from Glasgow.

On Tuesday evening a great mass meeting was held in the round room of the Rotunda, at Dublin, to take into consideration the aspect and position of Irish national affairs at the present momentous crisis. The following resolutions were passed:

Resolved,—That the population of the republic, from the St. Lawrence to the Gulf of Mexico, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific shores, being largely composed of men of Irish birth and Irish blood, it would be unnatural to suppose that Ireland could remain an indifferent spectator between England and America.

Resolved,—That the events of the hour imperatively dictate to all Irishmen a forgetfulness of all past differences and an united rally for the old cause of their country.

Resolved,—That a chairman, two secretaries, and a committee of 21 members, each having been duly and separately proposed and seconded, be chosen by a majority of voices at this mass meeting, to take into consideration the advisability of an organization in the present state of affairs abroad.

The Liverpool Post says the whole purpose of the meeting was to express in every variety of phase and demonstration, sympathy with America. It is quite natural that this should be the tendency of the Irish, even apart from their hatred to England for scarcely any Irish family is unrepresented in the United States. The meeting, however, was useless and needless.

It is stated that evidence will be laid before the European governments to prove that the blockade of the Southern ports is inefficient and illegal.

The London Times' City article says it must be kept in view that the designs of Mr Seward are reported for some time to have been the cause of disagreement in the Washington Cabinet, and that the decision of the present question is not entirely in the hands of that personage.

Later advices are awaited for with great anxiety, as it is seen that the course of circumstances may be much modified by anything that takes place between the opposing armies in the interval from now and the arrival of the British demands. A victory by the federalists might, perhaps, so satisfy the mob as to enable the government to act independently, and on the other hand, a defeat might be equally productive of a pacific tone. At the same time, however, there is danger that the bad features of the situation may be aggravated by intelligence of some new offence on the part of the federal cruisers.

FRANCE.

Paris papers assert that the despatches sent by the British Government to Lord Lyons, although couched in moderate language, are nevertheless inflexible in their conclusion, which is the restitution of the Commissioners. If this is refused, Lord Lyons is to leave Washington, together with all the members of the legation. The same journals affirm that the English war vessels which are now being prepared for sea would leave for America in the beginning of January.

The Patrie publishes the following under the head of latest intelligence. It is stated that the despatch addressed by the British Cabinet to Lord Lyons to be communicated to President Lincoln is based exclusively on legal considerations. This decision establishes that the Commander of the San Jacinto by acting as he has done, has committed a flagrant breach of maritime law and insulted the English flag.—That the only right that officer Wilkes possessed was to compel the Trent to go to some American port where the case could have been brought before the proper authorities in presence of the English consul; that if on his search dispatches had been found establishing that Mason and Slidell were on a mission directly or immediately connected with military operations, the commander would have been justified in seizing these despatches and arresting the envoys, sending on a detailed report of the transactions, with such notes and observations as the English consul might think fit to annex. That these formalities not having been fulfilled no charge can be

The various military stations in Ireland had been ordered to complete their strength of the 68th regiments of the line.

The British Government is negociating for steamers to transport troops to Canada.

The Times of the 10th inst., says that the Niagara's advices encouraged the hope of a disavowal by the cabinet at Washington of the San Jacinto outrage, and a surrender of the Southern Commissioners.

The first and third batallions of the military train, 600 strong, with a battery of six pieces, and the 18th company of the royal artillery have been ordered to proceed immediately to Canada. The grenadier guards are to hold themselves in readiness to embark at a moment's notice.

At Lloyds there was less excitement though little was being done on the war risks. Canada 5's had advanced 4 per cent. United States 5's and New York shares also advanced on the 9th inst. The rate of discount at Hamburg had declined to 4 per cent.

ARRIVAL OF THE PERSIA.

By Telegraph to the Examiner.

St. Johns, N. F., Dec. 23.

The Persia arrived off Cape Race on the 23rd instant. She sailed from Liverpool on the 15th and has 1,100 troops on board for Rivere du Loup or Bic.

The news is important.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert expired at noon on Sunday the 15th instant, of gastric fever. His illness was not considered dangerous till Friday.

The Liverpool Mercury of the 14th states that the Earl of Derby had been consulted by the Government. He approved of its policy in reference to the American difficulty, and suggested to ship-owners to instruct the captains of outward bound ships to signalize any English vessels that war with America is probable. This suggestion has been strongly approved by the underwriters.

The steamship Australasia which also passed Cape Race this evening, sailed from Liverpool on the 13th with troops for Canada.

The first Division of the 10th Brigade Garrison Artillery embarked on board the Niagara for Halifax on the 14th.

It was understood that ten companies of Engineers are to be sent to British America.

THE INSTRUCTIONS TO LORD LYONS.

(From the Scotsman.)

The terms and exact character of the instructions sent to Lord Lyons are kept a close secret, but we learn that amongst those persons in London likely to have the best means of judging, there is a general belief that the amount and form of the reparation which our Government has felt bound to demand are such as the American Government is not likely to concede. The most likely, or rather least unlikely, chance of an amicable settlement, so far as can at present be seen, is considered to be that the Senate, in which there is a majority strongly opposed to Mr. Seward, may, were it only to overthrow him, declare for redress and conciliation.

(From the London Globe.)

One of the local journals appears to infer from the fact of the Europa being detained at Queenstown until Monday afternoon, that the Government waited to hear the news brought by the Persia before sending off their despatches to Lord Lyons—The fact is the despatch to Lord Lyons was not officially completed in sufficient time to allow the messenger to leave on Saturday night, and the only object of the detention of the Europa was to enable the messenger to get on board.

CANADIAN DEFENCES.

It is no secret that the people of the British Provinces are looking to their defences. When Mr. Seward prophesied that the disruption of the Union would be inevitably followed by the annexation of Canada to the North, it was fair warning to our neighbors to keep their eye on Mr. Seward. The responsibilities of office may have moderated Mr. Seward's mode of expressing his ideas; it remains to be seen whether the ideas themselves are unchanged. His defence circular was curiously ill-timed, if his general policy was intended to be conciliatory. The people of the Colonies have felt this, and they are taking measures accordingly. The defences of the frontier cities are being looked to, and volunteering is becoming popular. In all the Provinces there may soon be 150,000 under arms. Large bodies are already well drilled in company drill; they may soon receive sufficient military instruction to enable them to act in large masses. Everywhere military spirit is rife, and there can be no doubt, that while decrying and deploring war as an evil, the people of British America will prepare themselves for the defence of their houses, and will accept nothing short of an honorable peace.—Scottish American Journal.

☞ A terrible accident occurred at Cleveland on Friday night. Mrs. Kipp, the wife of a painter and paper hanger, was engaged in knitting while her husband was reclined upon a lounge, asleep. The light of the lamp, a coal-oil one, getting dim, she procured the can of oil and proceeded to replenish it. Holding it too near the flame the oil ignited, and a terrible explosion followed, blowing the can into fragments and setting fire to the poor woman's clothes, which burned with frightful rapidity. The husband, awakened by the noise, sprang to his feet, when an awful sight met his eyes. His wife was writhing in the agonies of death—her hair entirely burned from her head, and her clothing entirely gone, with the exception of a shred of the drawers. A portion of the room was also on fire, but was very soon extinguished. Mrs. Kipp left three children. The oldest only four years and the youngest a little infant of only nine months.

☞ It is currently reported in Washington, that John C. Breckenridge, and R. M. T. Hunter, have already been selected by President Davis to go to Europe as Ambassadors, in place of Messrs. Slidell and Mason, and that they are intending to secretly cross over to Canada and make their way to Halifax, from which port they will set sail.

☞ L'Ordre says that, since the outbreak in the United States, 50 French Canadian families, comprising 160 souls, have returned from that distracted country to settle in the parish of St. Anicet. The praiseworthy efforts of the French Canadian Colonization Society will, no doubt, induce many more to return to their ancient homesteads.

☞ The Whitby Press, of Wednesday last, notices a dinner given to Mr. Christie, one of the employees of the local branch of the Montreal Bank, who has been transferred to Peterborough after several years' service. Our contemporary says, "by his correct business habits, his urbanity, and his participation as a member of the community, he has gained the confidence and esteem of all who know him."

From Washington.

Washington, Dec. 19.

At one o'clock Lord Lyons called on the Secretary of State, who was then at the capitol. He called again at three o'clock. The communication which he made is as yet a secret. No cabinet meeting has been held on the subject.

The general feeling of the city is less warlike than at first, and the people talk coolly of surrendering the emmissaries, if it can be done without a sacrifice of honour, rather than engage at this time in a foreign war.

The report that the members of the Cabinet take a similar view of the question gains currency and finds belief, but while it is not true that such a conclusion has been arrived at in the Cabinet meetings, on the one hand it is untrue, on the other hand that not to surrender under any circumstances or for any consideration is absolute, but while the Government will do nothing to provoke war, it will guard well the National honor.

Should arbitration be proposed, it may be accepted. Should a sufficient consideration for the surrender of Mason & Slidell by offered, it may be made.

A prominent member of the Government stated, in conversation this evening, that Lord Lyons would not demand his passports, that Mason and Slidell would not be given up, and that there was no probability of war with England.

Englishmen are confident of a war between the two countries. This opinion, however, is based upon no official communication, and while it excites some unpleasant feelings, it carries no weight.

Several Englishmen now serving in our army, among them Col. Havelock and Capt Stewart, have, it is declared, signified their intention to resign, should further complications ensue.

In other cases extraordinary and painful evidences of sudden hostility to our cause has been shown. The general feeling, however, appears to be a sincere regret at what they regard the inevitable issue.

Mr. Adams' despatches hate little to say touching the Trent, having received no communication on the subject from the British Government.

In the case of the Nashville, he had made representations, but had received no reply.

Private letters from England, of which many have reached Washington, speak of the excitement there as intense, reminding the Americans of the feeling of the North after Fort Sumpter fell. One letter, dated Dec. 4, speaks of seeing a newly painted cab on Oxford street, with the British and Secession flags crossed on a panel; and little Secession flags for sale on the street.

As the Adelphi Theatre, controlled by Dion Bourcicault, where the Octoroon was being played, the Stars and Stripes which had floated there were wrapped round the staff, and the Stars and Bars displayed.

The Government has intelligence from Manassas to-day that still more troops have arrived there from the South. Jeff Davis anticipating an attack is adding every available man to the army of Johnston and Beauregard.

Herald's Despatch.

Washington, December 19.

An absurd rumor was circulated to-day that the Government had decided to surrender Mason and Slidell. It is without any foundation whatever. Up to 11 o'clock to-night Lord Lyons had made no communication from his Government to the President or Secretary of State, relative to the traitors Mason and Slidell.

Mr. Adams in his communication to Mr. Seward, gives a clear and detailed idea of the feeling of the British people and the sentiment of the British Statesmen, but does not indicate that he knows the purport of the instructions of the British Government to Lord Lyons. Nothing contained in Mr Adams' despatches indicates that that Government will make demands relative to the seizure of the traitors.

This is not only true but I am permitted to announce by high official authority that private letters received to-day from distinguished British Statesmen, assert that the British Government will not demand the release of Mason and Slidell, but will require such reparation as the United States can honorably grant. This is also confirmed by other private correspondence of Americans in London who have facilities for learning the intentions of the British Government.

(By Telegraph to the Examiner)

Washington, Dec. 22, 1861.

Lord Lyons yesterday made his first special communication to the Secretary of State, who at once set about the preparation of a reply. The contents of these despatches are known to no one except those two, the President, and probably General McClellan.

The general opinion among outsiders near the official barrier that guards the circle of diplomacy, is that they do not present an ultimatum, but leave room for negotiations as we have heretofore intimated. As regards the statement that the Cabinet is determined to yield to England, even to the point of surrendering Messrs. Slidell & Mason rather than to fight, which the Herald of Saturday made so boldly, and the Times insinuates, is utterly and mischievously false.

News of the Week.

☞ The iron clipper-ship Roseneath recently made the trip from Quebec to Glasgow in 18 days.

☞ We notice by the Quebec papers that Lord Monck makes it a practice to attend the drill-parades of the Quebec volunteers.

☞ Captain Gaskie, the ship owner at Kingston, has placed two schooners at the command of the British Government, should they be required. Government declines immediate acceptance.

☞ A party of sappers, consisting of a sergeant and eleven sappers and engineers, arrived in the Rivere Du loup train, on the 6th instant, having performed the distance between Rivere Du loup and Fredericton, in about ten days.

☞ The Court Journal says, that the Prince of Wales will come of age on the 9th November 1862, and that the honor of knighthood will probably be conferred on the Mayors of leading cities who, on that occasion, present addresses to him, Canada better be on the look out.

☞ A Halifax paper says that Lord Mulgrave, the Commander-in-Chief of the Militia in Nova-Scotia, has requested the officers of the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 6th Regiment of Halifax Militia to forward him a statement of the effective companies under their command.

☞ On Sunday morning, the 23rd Nov., an old seven-story building in High street, (Edinburgh) Scotland, suddenly fell, burying nearly all the inmates in the ruins. The house was several centuries old. Twenty dead bodies have been taken out, and about twelve badly injured. About a hundred people lived in the building.

☞ Mr. Caulis, of Madoc, met with an accident on Monday the 2nd inst., by which he lost his life. He had just stepped on the horse-power of a threshing machine, and losing his balance his leg came in contact with one of the arms of the "bull wheel," tearing the flesh completely off the sole of his foot. Mortification set in, and although medical aid was promptly in attendance, he died in a few days after.—Belleville Intelligencer.

☞ We have perused a Prussian order, issued after the coronation of the King, that all the members of the Royal Family shall take the title of "Most Serene." All well-wishers of Prussia must join in the hope that the serenity may not be confined to the royal family, but be so diffused over all classes, that they need not covet the neighboring duchies or other peoples' fleets but be "all serene."

☞ An office has been opened in Washington for embalming the dead. The system adopted is that of the celebrated Surgist, of Paris—by an injection of a powerful antiseptic fluid, which soon hardens the tissues to a marble-like substance and perfectly preserves the color and features, and keeps the body free from all offensive odor.

Birth.

MUMMY WHEAT.

Many persons feel much interested in asking whether the wheat found among the mummies of ancient Egypt, and yet [illegible] has been reproduced to any extent, or whether "mummy" wheat be a distinct kind in the acceptation of agriculturists.—Figara is a variety of wheat sometimes cultivated under that name, and supposed to be the same as that found in the catacombs. It is not "cultivated" in a proper sense, but merely as a supposed curiosity. It is generally, however, supposed to be a variety of triticum compositum, or many-spiked Egyptian wheat. This differs much from our autumnum and hybernum, having the rachis branched, and consisting of several spikelets. Wheat has no doubt been found among mummies. The French savans who accompanied the army to Egypt found it in vessels so hermetically sealed that it retained both its form and color, and in appearance did not differ from the common wheat of the country, triticum hibernum. But though it has been found, we yet want an authentic instance of its having germinated. Sir G. Wilkinson gave some so-called "mummy wheat" to a number of persons to cultivate, but grains of maize were found to spring up along with it—a plant not known until the discovery of America. This shows evidently that the grains were not 3,000 years old, as they were supposed and sometimes represented to be. The late Mr. Pettigrew opened a mummy and found some peas in the enveloped cerecloths. Three were given to Mr. Crimston, the manufacturer of eye-snuff, and were raised by him in his garden at Highgate. Mitchell, the florist, Kempt-town, Brighton, raised wheat from grains taken from a mummy, and given to him by the late Marquis of Bristol. The only doubt is whether the mummies are genuine article, as the Arabs are great adepts in their manufacture. The vitality of seeds is prodigious. During the excavations at Uriconium (Wroxeter) a piece of ground was turned up. It was proved to be the stable of the garrison. In due time it was covered by a beautiful crop of barley and oats, the seed of which had been spilt by a careless Roman, more than 1,500 years before.

HOW TO WINTER CABBAGE.

Lay down poles or rails, in pairs, on high dry ground, or on a ridge sufficiently raised to avoid water. Set a row of cabbage near together along each pair of rails, the heads downward. Spread a little straw over the heads, not under them, and put on a covering of earth pointed up well to shed all rain. The roots need not be covered. A little freezing of the cabbage does not hurt them when there is a sufficient coat of earth to draw out the frost gradually.—Several of these rows may be placed side by side. The earth taken up for covering will leave open ditches between the rows, and by breaking outlets from these the soil is kept drained. In winter pieces of the bank of frozen earth, with a cabbage in each, may be cut off with an old axe, and carried into the cellar. The earth will gradually thaw off, leaving the cabbage fresh in good condition for use.

For those wanted early in winter, a simple method is to sink a barrel in the soil and fill it with heads cut off from the stems, loosely thrown in. Cover the barrel with boards and a little soil, which can be lifted off and the heads taken out as needed. The cooler cabbages can be kept the better.—A house cellar is too warm.

TO MAKE BUTTER IN WINTER.

When the milk is strained it is put upon the stove and heated to near scalding heat, and then put away for the cream to rise.—After sufficient cream is gathered for churning it is placed where it will be kept warm a sufficient time for it to sour, (usually about 24 hours) when it is subjected to the process of churning, which rarely occupies more than twenty or thirty minutes. Previous to our pursuing this method, it often requires from two to three, and sometimes four hours to accomplish the same result.

AMONG the most important of modern Medical discoveries stands the Canadian Pain Destroyer. As a Family Medicine it is well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pains from Side, Back and Head, Coughs, Colds Sore Throats, Sprains, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbis, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Burns, Scalds, Frost-bites, &c.—The Canadian Pain Destroyer has now been before the public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single instance of dissatisfaction, where the directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its virtues and magical effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it thoroughly, and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon it being a sovereign remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, incuring the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the torturing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. TIS FOUND WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

A perfect Antidote, Specific and Cure for

RHEUMATISM & NEURALGIA

has long been needed. After earnest and patient research, this has been triumphantly discovered. It is called

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING!

Watson's Neuralgia King reaches the source of the trouble, and banishes the disease from the system. Unlike the untold number of Liniments and Embrocations which merely stimulates the surface, are but temporary in their effects, and are, at best, of doubtful virtue, it STRIKES AT THE HEAT OF the ailment, ARRESTS IT, KILLS IT, ERADICATES IT, and leaves no trace behind.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING also cures GOUT AND DYSPEPSIA, in all their forms. It is now giving relief to thousands who have been suffering form these diseases, and who have tried all other remedies in vain.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING has received the highest testimonials from the highest sources in regard to its wonderful efficacy. It operates with equal success in mild and chronic cases, never failing to work out a speedy and permanent cure.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING costs but one dollar a bottle, and less than a bottle often affects the end desired.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING is the only Specific and cure for Rheumatism and Neuralgia that has ever been discovered.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYANT'S

PULMONIC WAFERS.

THE most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis. Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organ is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

PROTECTION TO LIFE AND PROPERTY.

300,000 Feet

OF THE NEW PATENT ENGLISH ELECTRO-GALVANIZED, ANNEALED AND CARBONIZED

LIGHTNING RODS

JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH 'SPRATTS' RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!

AND ENLARGED

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers; is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod Professor Croft has a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of the rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, easing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fall in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Common iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

Toronto, Sept. 15, 1860.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPERintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods so highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE we present you with a perfect likeness of Tamco, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "Mountain Herb Pills" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanacs and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life soon dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. This Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and sweet, clearing and remedicating the vital organs.

Transparent indeed, is it to us, that we are able to place within your reach a medicine like the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existance for the following Complaints:

Blood Complaints, Coughs, Colds, Chest Diseases, Costiveness, Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa, Dropsy, Debility, Fever and Ague, Female Complaints, Headache, Indigestion, Inflamation, Inflammations, Intermittent Fever, Internal Weakness, Liver Complaints, Leprosy of Scurvy, &c., Sore and Grand, Secondary Symptoms, Tetter.

GREAT FEMALE MEDICINE

Females who value health, should never be without these Pills. They purify the blood, remove obstructions of all kinds, cleanse the skin of all pimples and blotches, and bring the rich color of health to the pale cheek.

☞ The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Tamecos, a tribe of Aborigines in Mexico. Get the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "GREAT Discovery" of the Aztecs.

Observe.—The Mountain Herb Pills are put up in a Beautiful Wrapper. Each box contains 40 pills, and Retail at 25 cents per box. All genuine, have the Signature of B. L. JUDSON & CO., on each box.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, AND INDEED THE WHOLE CLASS OF COMPLAINTS ARISING FROM IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will we found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Every where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops: and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially the power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

Happy New Year

Poetry.

For the Examiner.

NEW-YEAR'S HYMN.

Father Supreme, we now draw near,
A youthful lowly band,
To greet with joy the opening year,
And bless Thy fostering hand.

We thank Thee for the year now past,
Its calm, and storm, and shade;
Its hopes Thy wisdom overcast,
Its joys not doomed to fade.

For grief and joy we thank Thee, Lord,
Since each is wisely given
To execute Thy will and word,
And draw us nearer Heaven.

Help us in all Thy band to see,
Mark well each wise design,
And in youth's freshness follow Thee—
Knowing no will save Thine.

Then as years glide into the past,
Leaching our life's brief day,
The "better Land" shall round us cast
Its pure and fadeless ray.

And when our work on earth is done,
O may we all appear
Saved in the Kingdom of Thy Son,
Through an eternal year.

For the Examiner.

TO A SAINTED MOTHER.

Thou art gone to thy sainted rest, mother,
And we are left behind,
With thy Savior thou art gone to dwell,
And in His glory shine.

'Twas thou who prayers and blessings pour'd
Upon our youthful head;
'Twas thou who in our early days,
Our feet to Jesus led.

Dear mother, we will closely bind
Thy memory to our hearts.
We will think of what on earth thou wast,
And of what in Heaven thou art.

We will think of thy dear angel form,
Thy sweet and loving smile,
Thy love ever new and warm,
Thy words so sweet and mild.

We will think of thee as we stood
Around thy dying bed;
And thou asked Him our path to guide
Who had all thy footsteps led.

We will think of thee as thou art,
A bright, bright spirit now;
A glorious angel clothed in light,
With thy crown about thy brow.

We would not call thee back again,
To this world of sin and care;
For resting on thy Savior's breast,
Thou'rt supremely happy there.

God of our mother hear our prayer,
Let Thy aid to us be given,
To walk the pathway she hath trod
Till we reach the portals of Heaven.

HEFFIS.

The New Year's Wish.

It was the last night of the year; a cold December night, but what of that? It was warm and comfortable in Mr. Howard's snug little parlor. A cheerful fire was burning, and the inmates only knew that it was cold by hearing the wind whistle around the windows. Mr Howard was not rich, but he had enough of the comforts of life to content any one of moderate desires. Yet the little group that were gathered around his fireside, did not all look happy or contented. Anna, the oldest daughter, sat in a corner, leaning her head on her hand, with a very downcast look. At last she exclaimed, with an impatient tone, "Dear me how dull it is here; I wish we could ever have things here as they have them at uncle William's."

Mrs. Howard looked very much grieved. She had observed with much regret, that ever since Anna's visit at her uncle's, her own quiet home had lost its attractions.—Nor was this evil confined to herself, but was beginning to affect the younger children. Anna was constantly contrasting everything at home with what she had seen during the winter she spent in New York. On the day to which we have alluded, she had been giving an account of the way in which she and her cousin Julia had spent last New Year's day; and as she enumerated the splendid presents which had been received, the simple love-tokens which had been distributed in their own family circle, lost all their value in the children's eyes. And when Anna expressed aloud the feelings over which she had so long been brooding, other brows were clouded, and other young hearts were beginning to feel the workings of envy and discontent.

At first no one took notice of Anna's angry speech, but after a short silence, Cassie said "I wish—" but she left her sentence unfinished.

"Well my daughter," said Mrs. Howard, "what do you wish?" But Cassie did not reply, for she knew that her father would think her wishes vain and extravagant.

"I suppose," said Mrs. Howard, "you wish that your father was as rich as uncle William, and lived in as splendid a house, and could make as costly presents; but, my dear child, you would not be any happier then, than you now are."

"Why not?" said Anna. "I am sure I should be perfectly happy, if we had things as they have them at uncle William's."

"Is your cousin Julia perfectly happy."

"I don't know why she should not be. She has enough to make her happy."

Anna then began to describe in eloquent terms the splendours which were enjoyed in New York. The children listened, with undisguised admiration, and laughed to think how most triumphant Julia's debut must have been. This simple but unreasonable discontent of their own little home, would doubtless cause much unhappy thought, combined with the splendid pictures of fashionable pleasure, which Anna had painted. But, fortunately, E. S. No. 1, Nov. 19th, 1861.

ter to make the visit which threatened to have such a disastrous effect on her character.

When Anna had finished her description, Mr. Howard, laying down his newspaper, said, "well, my children, to-morrow is New Year's day, now what do you most wish for? Suppose I were able to gratify your most eargest wishes, what would they be?"

The children hesitated. They wished for so many things that they really could not decide which they most wanted. At length Anna said she thought she would like a piano such as had to be given to her cousin Julia last new year's day.

"Well," said her father, "if you had a piano you would want to learn to play on it. Can Julia play?"

"She is learning father, but, oh dear, how she does hate to practice. She has to sit three or four hours every day and she gets so tired that sometimes she says she wishes that pianos had never been invented."

"Then it seems," said Mr. Howard quietly, "that her piano does not make her perfectly happy." Anna did not reply.

"Well Cassie," said her father stroking her golden curls, "what do you want to make you happy? Last year you seemed quite satisfied with your father's kiss and your mother's approving smile, but now my little daughter requires more to make her happy."

"Why I want you and mother to love me still, but then—"

"Then what? Speak out, my dear."

"Why if I had a canary-bird, I think—I am sure father, it would make me very happy. You know it would sing so sweetly."

"And you would really be happy," said her father, "to keep that beautiful bird a prisoner in a cage."

"Oh father I would make it very happy. I would take such nice care of it and wreath its cage with flowers and evergreens."

"But birds were made to fly in the air, not to be shut up in a cage."

"Oh but it is different with canary birds, father; you know they could not live in our cold air; they would die."

"True, but they could live in the fragrant orange groves, their native home. Would my little daughter be happy to be shut up in a splendid drawing-room, say like Uncle William's where she could never exercise her limbs? I fancy you would long for a run in the green fields in summer, or a slide on the ice in winter."

"Well father, I never thought so much of this before. I don't know after all as a bird would make me so very happy."

"Well," said George, "I know very well what would make me happy; plenty of interesting books. I should never care for anything else."

Mr. Howard glanced at the boy's pale cheeks and said "I think there are times when books would be but a poor relief to that aching head."

George smiled and said, "I wish I did not have quite so much headache. I lose a great deal of time by it."

"Then you acknowledge that there are times when books would not make you perfectly happy without something else. And so you will find it, my children, with everything which belongs only to this world.—There lived once in the far East a powerful monarch. His father, a brave warrior, had conquered his enemies, so that the young monarch found his kingdom in a state of perfect peace. He was the possessor of untold wealth. The mines of India yielded up for him their sparkling gems, and the ocean isles sent their tribute of fragrant spices. One night as he reclined upon his regal couch, God spoke to him and told him to ask what he wished for."

"Oh father are you telling us about Solomon," said little Cassie.

Her father continued. "The young king knew that God had power to grant anything he could wish for, and he felt that it was very important he should make a wise choice. He had enough of wealth and enough of fame. He thought of his people whom he had loved and who in their turn, idolized him; had he not better ask for long life, as he could thereby do so much good in a long and peaceful reign? But he remembered that the longest life must come to an end and therefore, he resolved to ask for something which would last forever. He thought again of his beloved people, and then asked for wisdom. God granted his petition, and the heaven-inspired king has left on record, that "wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace." He never had reason to regret his choice, neither will any one who, like him, choses for eternity. Oh my children, the perishing things which you so eagerly desire could never make you happy. They would but "perish in the using." But now, in your beautiful youth, lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven."

Mr. Howard took the Bible and read a passage with great solemnity, and then in a low, fervent tone, offered a prayer such as only a parent's love could prompt. He begged for the young immortals around him, that they might be early led to chose the better portion which could never be taken away for them. When in earnest tones he pleaded that God would grant to each of them a new heart, George sobbed aloud. Upon rising, the little girls took a light, and kissing their father and mother, retired.—George lingered until they were gone; then coming forward, he threw his arms around his father's neck, and said with choking utterance, "Oh father, I wish I had a new heart; nothing else will make me happy."

SINGULAR BUT SERIOUS.

We find in an exchange the following anecdote, taken from a book entitled "Notes of an Army Surgeon, and said to relate an occurrence during the siege of Fort Erie:

"I remember one day in making my usual round, I noticed a man privately loading his gun with two charges. Knowing that such a proceeding was dangerous, and that he could not safely fire it off, I asked him what he wished to do with it. He replied that he wished to shoot a Yankee. I told him that I would relieve him of the gun, and that he could shoot a Yankee the next time he went on picket. He then said that he wished to shoot a Yankee officer, as he had a particular spite against one of them. I then asked him what he had against the officer, and he replied that the officer had insulted him. I then asked him what the officer had said to him, and he replied that the officer had called him a liar. I then asked him what he had said to the officer, and he replied that he had told the officer that he lied. I then asked him what the officer had said to him, and he replied that the officer had told him that he would not fight him. I then asked him what he had said to the officer, and he replied that he had told the officer that he would fight him

THE CANADIAN PRESS.

[ONE AMERICAN VIEW.]

From the New York Commercial Advertiser.

What have the people of this country done or said or thought against their neighbors north of the lakes, that half of the newspapers should be hateful of indignation against the Federal Government? No opposition has gone from these States to disturb their repose; no threats against them have been uttered by those in authority, nor even by the press, save a journal whose vagaries have given it an unenviable reputation in both hemispheres. For any community to become exalted in consequence of such diatribes would be as sensible as if it had been assailed in Bell's Life or the Clipper, and went into hysterics in consequence.

The Canadian people are not much given to manufacturing or commercial pursuits. Of course, then, their interests are not compromised to any serious extent through the blockade—certainly not one hundredth part as much as those of our own loyal people. Their ships are not lying idle in the harbours, nor are their mills running half time or less for the want of a supply of cotton. On the other hand, they have been earnest opponents of Southern slavery. They have hospitably fed and sheltered the fugitive negro fleeing from "the house of bondage." They have been unsparing in denunciation of Northern people for their alleged complicity in supporting "the peculiar institution." Yet all at once, when the free North begins to set itself in a nobler attitude, and the Southern planters break out in an unprovoked rebellion; at a moment big with the fate of the system of slavery itself, half the journals of Canada turn round and scold us as if we were so many pickpockets, for seeking to preserve the unity of our country and the form of government under which it has prospered beyond all parallel in history.

It is the sentiment of loyalty to the Home Government which actuates our censors at the present moment. We have nothing to say against that feeling; but surely it need not run over in the shape of bile against those who have never sought their injury, and have not the slightest desire to injure them. Loyalty! We too have a word to say on this subject. If the cords of fealty bind the people of the Provinces to the British Throne, much more did they bind our Southern people to the general government, existing by themselves, for themselves and among themselves. Admit that under circumstances similar to those existing in this country last year, a portion of the Provincials—say the habitants of Lower Canada—had thrown off their allegiance, seized forts, besieged others, waged actual and relentless war against their countrymen, imprisoned peaceful citizens, confiscated private property, repudiated the payment of debts, and proceeded to institute a government based upon ideas as antiquated and abhorrent as the Spanish Inquisition—what would be thought of it? And what would be thought of the people of the United States, were half of their newspapers to give the movement a tacit approval, or at least to devote all their energies to censuring the loyalist portion of their Northern neighbours? Should they not write themselves and the community which sustained them, hypocrites, whenever they mentioned "loyalty," and enemies to the public weal under all circumstances?

We are loath to apply any harsh epithets to a part of our Canadian neighbors, much less to all. But if such journals as the Toronto Leader were to be accepted as the mouth-piece of public sentiment, they would do their best to make us believe hard things of those of whom we have always thought and spoken in the kindest spirit.

Under all circumstances the people of the British Provinces must be intimately related to ourselves in every material interest and every social movement. They buy and sell more with us than with the people of the parent country. For hundreds of miles the line separating us from them is only an abstraction. A vast system of railroads in each is made tributary to the other. Hundreds of steamboats traverse the great lakes and rivers, which now rather unite than separate the two peoples.

They have grown great side by side for nearly half a century, without any outbreak of hostilities, and scarcely a ripple on the surface. Such a circumstance redounds to the credit of both communities. Our people are not the grasping, avaricious, unscrupulous race which they have been reported to be, or they would have been often involved in war with the Canadians since the peace of 1815. The leaders of public opinion here, with the vast majority of our citizens, of all parties, desire nothing more than to live and let live; to cultivate friendly intercourse with their neighbors whether North or South.

But while peace possesses great advantages to us, it is indispensable to the people of the Provinces. Nature has barred their only great outlet to the Ocean for five month in a year. During the remainder they must pass through these States to reach the outside world, or submit to inconvenience which would be now intolerable. We are aware that an application has been made in London to furnish means for building the long-projected Quebec and Halifax railway; but Mr. Ball has sunk so many millions of pounds sterling in the Grand Trunk and whatever now practically worthless, that it will be impossible to induce him to spend another shilling for constructing public works in the province. In time to come, it is given out at head quarters that our neighbours to the Northward and Eastward must depend upon themselves and not upon the home Government for the means to protect themselves and develope their vast resources.

Meanwhile, the two peoples are bound up in each other's welfare, let the journals abuse their appreciation of the ignorant crowds, and strive to obliterate those feelings that "make for peace." We ask neither a cheer nor a dime from the partizans; but we do have a right to expect during the present insurrection, other language than that of abuse, other feelings than those of asperity such as might be shown by mortal enemies towards each other. We put the question to the Canadian press as a loyal institution asking it to bear in mind their growth that sentiment has been outraged by the conduct of our Southern rebels.

FRENCH OPINION.

La Patrie, in an article signed by M. Cochereul in Cherbourg, says:—"It appears certain that M. M. Mason and Slidell were seized on a passenger ship of war, doubtless by mistake. If this outrage of the north had wished to make use of the "Trent" to introduce arms or ammunition into America, but they were, on the contrary, going to Europe. Although the Federal Government cannot dispense with exacting, as a reparation, the dismissal of the officers of the "San Jacinto," the liberation of the passengers taken from the "Trent," and an indemnity for them. Will the Cabinet at Washington be able to make all these concessions, in face of the state of irritation in which the press of the North keeps the population against England? It is, therefore, to be feared that complications of the most serious nature may arise between England and the United States, and we perfectly understand the impression the news produced on the London stock exchange."

ANNUAL OFFICIAL REGISTER OF WRECKS FOR 1860.

We, not long since, noticed the receipt of a wreck chart, showing all the dangerous points of the coast of the British Isles and the number of wrecks which have occurred during 1860 on various parts of the British coast. We have since received a synopsis of the annual official report of "shipwrecks on the coast and in the seas of the British Islands." The report opens with a review of the annual average loss of life and property which is put down at 800 lives per year, and an annual destruction of property of £1,500,000 sterling in value.

During 1860 the total number of shipwrecks was 1379, with a loss of 536 lives. In the connection the report justly draws attention to the increased efficiency of the life-boat service, instancing the fact that of 2788 persons on board of stranded vessels, 2152 had been saved through the instrumentality of the life-boats, rocket and mortar apparatus, and other means furnished by the National Life-boat Association. Of the 1379 vessels wrecked in 1860, 556 were commanded by masters who were not required to take our certificate of competency. A singular fact is noted that, of the wrecks which took place during the year under various circumstances, eight occurred during "absolutely calm weather."

The casualties to shipping and the loss of human life during the past nine years amount to a total of 10,336 vessels or 1 in every 210 British, and 1 in every 232 foreign vessels, and giving an average loss of 1,148 vessels in the seas of Great Britain.

From this multitude of shipwrecks the sacrifice of life must be necessarily large, and we find that it reaches the melancholy total of 7,203, or, as before stated, the large number of 800 persons who have annually met a watery grave on the coasts and in the seas of Great Britain alone.—We learn that, during the past five years, within which time only the life-saving machinery on the coast had reached any great degree of efficiency, and for which, consequently, full returns have only been obtained, the number of lives saved by life-boats, rockets, and other like means, was 11,495.

We have also furnished, in the report, the figures showing the remuneration given to the crews of the life-boat for each separate vessel relieved, which, but that their services are a labor of love, seems marvellously out of proportion with the risks they encounter, the privations they endure, and the services they render.

For instance, the 16 men belonging to the brigs "Providence" and "Mayflower," were saved for the sum of £25. At Portmadoc, in a heavy gale with a terrific surf, 17 men were saved for £14. This is about 17*s* a head, and flesh and blood is certainly cheap at that rate. The Carnsore life-boat saved 19 persons at a cost of £22 14*s*

The poetry of gratitude, too, brightens those sorrowful narratives of death and destruction wrought by the inconstant sea. The report tells us that the Carnsore life-boat, mentioned above as saving 19 people from shipwreck, was the "thank-offering" of a lady who was saved from drowning.—And a most worthy and appropriate "thank-offering" it is! Another and a sadder mark of grateful remembrance of the noble labors of the life-boatmen is furnished by two ladies who, in memory of a sister torn from them despite the exertions of the life-boat's crew, placed a life-boat at Llandudno, in North Wales, and called it the "Sister's memorial"—truly a fitting and touching memorial of bereavement, and a graceful tribute to the willing but fruitless endeavors of the crew.

"Truth is stranger than fiction," and the annals of the life-boat service surpass in their records of chivalrous daring, exciting incidents, and thrilling adventure, the most highly and artistically wrought narrative of the poet or romancist.—Quebec Chronicle.

THE CAREER OF A VILLAIN.

A PRETENDED ENGLISH NOBLEMAN.

The Skaneateles Democrat, this week, gives the upshot in the case of an impostor, a young Englishman by the name of Nurse, a resident of that village, who some months ago, it was announced, had inherited a handsome property by the demise of a relative in England, and that with it had descended a title which was to fall upon him under the style of "Sir James Burdett Nurse." "Captain of the Queen's Own Guard," &c.

The young nobleman has flourished gaily in the best society of Skaneateles for some months. He formed the acquaintance of the daughter of a worthy citizen of English descent, courted, and married her. They made a grand wedding tour, returned to Skaneateles, took elegant apartments at the Lake House, and set up as "English swells" and flourished generally in grand style.

Occasionally "Sir [illegible]" made a flying trip to New York to look after remittances which he claimed came through an eminent banking house known as the firm of "Belmont & Co." On the 4th instant he made one of these visits,—the last, as he took his portmanteau containing his wardrobe, and has not since been heard from.

The shocking case to his personal friends just before he decamped, have been discovered; a forged note, for several hundred dollars, bears his father-in-law's name; he is indebted to many of the honest men, tradesmen, and farmers of Skaneateles. His young wife, cheated, broken hearted, and deceived, has returned to her father's home, with all her bright visions shattered. Nurse has proved himself an adept and successful villain and impostor.—Syracuse Journal.

EXTRAORDINARY RESTORATION OF SPEECH.

Mr. John Underhill, of the Fox Inn, Lob Shernhill, joined the Worcester Artillery about [illegible] years ago and in February last was attacked with an attack of paralysis, which took away his speech, and every effort that medical skill could devise was tried to restore him, but proved abortive. He remained under such affliction for [illegible] months, when he left Shernhill for Worcester, and had not been at the Lunatic Asylum, and had not been at the [illegible] when he was brought home in a cart and taken to his own house. [illegible] assembled in looking at him, [illegible] he was trying to get his speech, when he was heard to utter a few words, [illegible] he has since regained the use of his speech.

COUNCIL REGULATIONS.

We would remind the ratepayers of the Town that Monday and Tuesday next are the days appointed by statute for the election of Councillors.—A good selection of men at this time is of great importance.—The views of every candidate, on the Railway question, should be known.

IMPORTANT FROM WASHINGTON.

Recent news received from Washington leaves no doubt that the portentous cloud of war threatening to break upon us, growing out of the Trent difficulty, is dispelled into thin air.

Lord Lyons has communicated to Mr. Seward the instructions he had received from Earl Russell to satisfy the American Government of the breach of international law committed by Captain Wilkes, and as a reparation for the liberation of the persons, and an acknowledgment for the outrage done to the British flag. Secretary Seward meets the demand in the most obsequious manner possible—frees the government of all complicity in the affair, throws the entire blame upon Captain Wilkes, who he says acted in the affair entirely on his own suggestion, without instructions from the government or foreknowledge by the government that he was so to act.

After placing himself and his country that the view now taken by England of the affair has been long a view held by America but heretofore denied by England, is an acknowledgement of error by the latter and of the right of the former. He then closes the official letter to Lord Lyons:—"The four persons in question are now held in military custody at Fort Warren, in the State of Massachusetts. They will be cheerfully liberated. Your Lordship will please indicate a time and place for receiving them." If this is not a great American collapse, pray what is?—the great fire eater obliged to eat dirt. Still we are glad to find that Mr. Seward in the hour of trial evinces sanity of mind as well as nerve to give the only answer to save what remains of the Republic.

THE POSTAL SERVICE AGAIN.

Whatever else may be said of the Hon. the Postmaster General, we cannot fairly accuse him of stiffness. Three weeks ago we published an article on the wretched arrangements of our postal communication with the Front, in which we repeated the loud and almost unanimous complaint about not being able to obtain the Toronto daily papers till 36 hours after they were printed. We also reflected on the seeming remissness of the Hon. Mr. Smith in allowing the arrangement to be continued when he had it in his power to remedy the evil.

Well, during the past week we have been called upon personally by the Hon. gentleman, who seems to think our strictures unmerited on his part. He laid before us a report of Mr. Sweetman, Post Office Inspector, as evidence that the present arrangements were good. He at the same time assured us that he had endeavored to induce Mr. Covert to change the time, but to no purpose, as Mr. Cumberland, the manager of the Port Hope and Lindsay Road, would not acquiesce in the proposed change. We give Mr. Smith the benefit of Mr. Sweetman's letter, which we herewith publish in full:

POST OFFICE INSPECTOR'S OFFICE,
Kingston, 21st Dec., 1861.

Sir,—I have the honor to inform you that agreeable with the instructions given to me I have carefully examined the question of mail service connected with the Port Hope and Peterboro, and Port Hope and Lindsay Railways, referred to me for report, in your letter A No. 773.

The night mail train on the Grand Trunk R. R. arrives at Port Hope as follows:—passin east at 8.55 p. m.; going west at 8.04 a. m. The day mail train passes east at 12.30 p. m., going west at 4.05 p. m.

The train on the Port Hope and Peterboro Railway leaves Port Hope at 5.30 a. m., and arrives at Peterboro at 10.50 a. m.; leaves Peterboro at 2.35 p. m., and is due at Port Hope at 4.55 p. m.

The most important portion of the correspondence is that passing to and from the East. For the eastern matter the present arrangement for the running of trains on the Port Hope and Peterboro road is very well adapted.

Letters and papers from the West by the night train due at Port Hope at 8.58 p. m. are forwarded to Port Hope, and despatched thence by the 8.30 a. m. train on the following day. The matter from the east by the night train due at Port H. at 8.04 a. m. is made up by the clerk on the Grand Trunk R. R., and is detained only 30 minutes at Port Hope before being sent to Peterboro.

Between the arrival of the Port Hope train at and its departure from Peterboro there is a space of about three hours, in which to reply to correspondence. As the train returns to Port Hope at 4.55 p. m., matter for the east and west, especially for the former, is sent to its destination with comparatively little delay.

The Port Hope and Lindsay train leaves Lindsay at 8 a. m., and is due at Port Hope at 11 a. m.; leaves Port Hope at 2 p. m. and reaches Lindsay at 5.40 p. m. The train from Port Hope to Peterboro' crosses the train from Lindsay to Port Hope at Millbrook at 10.05 a. m., and the train from Port Hope to Lindsay crosses that from Peterboro to Port Hope also at Millbrook at 3.20 p. m., thus affording the best possible accommodation between Lindsay and Peterboro, and intermediate offices. A letter from Lindsay or Omemee may be sent to Peterboro, and a reply thereto obtained within the same day—allowing 3 hours at Peterboro to prepare the reply.

If the Port Hope and Peterboro train left Peterboro instead of Port Hope in the morning, as I have heard it suggested, it would make a difference of 24 hours nearly more than is now necessary, in the time required to send a letter by way from Montreal to Peterboro and obtain a reply,—and it would also prevent the present expeditious exchange of mails between places on the Port Hope and Peterboro and Port Hope and Lindsay Roads. From a careful examination of the mail service as now performed in connection with the Railways in question, it seems to be satisfactory.

As Peterboro there seems to be but one item of complaint, which is that the Toronto daily newspapers are not obtained on the day of publication. There is some point given in the complaint by the fact that at Millbrook and at Lindsay these papers are received on the same day by the Lindsay train. The difficulty, however, may be easily remedied. The [illegible] is due at Port Hope at 12.30 p. m., and the newspapers and letters by that train may be made up at Port Hope for Peterboro, and be dispatched to Millbrook by the Lindsay train which leaves at 2 p. m. The train reaches Millbrook at 3.30 p. m., and by providing special service between Millbrook and Peterboro, the Peterboro mail referred to would reach its destination at about 6.30 p. m. and be delivered on the same evening. The cost of the special service between Millbrook and Peterboro will not exceed $1.75 per day—the distance is about 16 miles. It would be desirable that the courier should start from Millbrook, that in returning he might convey a bag from Peterboro for Port Hope containing matter posted between 2 p. m. and 6 p. m. This bag would be forwarded from Millbrook next morning by the Lindsay train.

The number of letters received at Port Hope for Peterboro and its dependencies by the Toronto day train is not large, but the newspapers vary from 60 to 90 as shown by the accompanying Return prepared by the Post-master at Port Hope. The return in question does not correctly exhibit the relative number of letters and newspapers addressed to Peterboro, and conveyed by the Toronto day and night trains, but Toronto sends a closed mail to Peterboro by each train—the mail by the day is always small and contains very few papers, as they are for the most part posted at the Post Office car. The mail by the night train is usually a large one and contains the chief part of the Toronto matter for the office alluded to. By the day train the Toronto daily newspapers for Peterboro are of course conveyed to Port Hope.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
M. SWEETMAN.
Post Office Inspector.

To the Hon. the P. M. General.

We have to remark that it seems to us a piece of great servility in Mr. Smith in allowing himself to be ruled by any R. P. director or company. If one person or company will not carry the mails as required another should be engaged;—if the Railroad men will not put themselves about a little to accommodate the public, perhaps the Gravel Road may be again brought into requisition. Surely the employer, not the employed, should say at what time the mails shall be despatched. What is there to hinder the train leaving for Peterboro on the arrival of the Grand Trunk train at 12.30, p. m. According to the above statement no train leaves Port Hope going North from that time till 2 o'clock. If the cars left for this place on the arrival of the Grand Trunk train at 12.30, they would have time to make the trip and return before the departure of the 8.58 train going east,—giving nearly the same length of time here as we have by the present arrangement. The complaint now made would in this way be remedied, and the people of Peterboro' accomodated, if that is any object to Mr. Smith. Mr. Sweetman's proposal for a courier to connect with the Lindsay train at Millbrook has been acted upon, and the papers are now delivered at 6:10 every evening. This is not the full measure of our desire, but we will be thankful even for small favors, and hope for larger ones. We think Mr. Smith must be thankful to us, (although he did not express himself in that way to us,) for bringing these complaints so forcibly before his notice. If he succeeds yet in getting the train to be run in the afternoon he will receive our thanks, and those of the whole community.

THE UNION AND GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

The Christmas examination of this school was held on Friday, the 20th inst., and the distribution of prizes took place in the evening, in the lecture room, where was a goodly number of parents and friends present. If we are to judge of the success of the examination by the number of prizes distributed, we must say that there is a pleasing improvement made in this Institution. The worthy local Superintendent assured us that good progress was being made by the several classes in the school, and congratulated the school, and the public generally, upon the very efficient corps of teachers now engaged in the important work of training the youth of the town. After the prizes were distributed, an address was read by one of the scholars, to Miss Clarke, one of the teachers, whose term of engagement with the school terminates, and a beautiful workbox was presented to her by her pupils, as a token of affection and of the estimation they held her in as a teacher. Miss Clarke replied in a very neat and suitable address, and altogether, it was a very pleasing feature in the evening's proceedings, to listen to the addresses reciprocating as they did the feeling that should always subsist between the teacher and the taught, as well as the harmony which seemed to prevail between the teachers of the school. Several short addresses were made by gentlemen on the platform, and at the conclusion Mr. Dunn, the Principal, was speaking to the children, when he alluded incidentally to the war, and although somewhat out of place, it appeared he could not suppress the outburst of the loyalty of his own spirit any more than of his pupils, who with deafening cheers responded to what he said of "true hearts and stout arms" to repel the invading foe. The proceedings altogether were very agreeable, and we think there was a general impression made on those present, that a turning point is being gained in the history of our Union School, and that from henceforth there will be no room for the just complaints heretofore made against it. We trust that it is really so, and that in future we shall have to record progress in this excellent institution.

GOVERNMENT PATRONAGE.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—I have been somewhat surprised at seeing for a long time back the Sheriff's advertisements of sales under legal process, in the Review. I should have thought that the abuse and recrimination poured upon that offices by the editor of that journal at the County Election last summer a sufficient reason for removing all patronage from him.

I find, however, they are still continued, and I have been casting in my mind for reasons for such singular conduct on the part of our worthy Sheriff. I have thought that the editor has a contract, and it has not yet expired. And again, the Review being a "rabid Ministerialist," and the Sheriff a Government officer there must be something done for the Government advocate after the fashion of quid pro quo. It has also occurred to me that probably our good Sheriff is actuated by higher principles than is common among us in rendering good for evil.

I have no doubt, Mr. Editor, but that you can assign the true reasons for the singular affair alluded to, and by furnishing them you will oblige your constant reader,

TITUS.

Peterboro', 17th Dec., 1861.

[The idea of a "subsidized press" seems not to have struck our correspondent. It is one of the peculiarities of the present ministry. Why, how could a press afford to bolster up a bad Government, and in doing so, insult the intelligent people to their faces, without outside support? Let our correspondent not be so thoughtless again as to imagine that the dirty work of a corrupt ministry can be done for nothing. As for our Sheriff: why, we would not say a word against the gentleman; he has independence of mind enough to assert his political views, in so far as his office will allow him,—but as to his advertising patronage, that is a thing neither the Sheriff, nor "Titus," nor humble "we," have the least control over. That is subsidy money, and must remain sacred to the cause of purchasing support.—EDITOR EXAMINER.]

MISSIONARY SERVICES.

The annual Missionary Services connected with the Bible Christian Mission, will be held in the Church, on Sunday, the 19th, and Monday, the 20th instants. Two Sermons will be preached on Sunday, at 10 a. m., and 6, p. m., the first by Mr. Colwell, of Peterboro,' and the other by Mr. Tapp, of Port Hope. On Monday evening at 7 o'clock, the annual Missionary meeting will be held, when several reverend gentlemen will be present to address the meeting.

☞ We observe by the Belleville papers that Mr. Bills Flint has given the use of the upper part of his store-house in that town, for the purpose of a drill-room.—Actions speak louder than words! The base slanders on Mr. Flint's loyalty by his unscrupulous opponents here are not forgotten yet, nor will the persons who invented them be forgotten soon either.

2ND VOLUNTEER RIFLE CO., PETERBOROUGH.—The officers have been recommended as follows: Captain, Mr. Thomas Green; Lieutenant, Mr. James Dixon; Ensign, Mr. Wm. Kennedy. The Company is increasing favourably [illegible]

PRESENTATION TO MISS CLARKE.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—By inserting in your valuable journal the address of the pupils of the Grammar and Union School, Peterborough, to Miss Clarke, when leaving them, and reply, you will confer no small obligation on every well-wisher of the school. The address evidently shows how highly the labors and the talents of the teacher were appreciated, while the reply indicates the fact that there was good ground for what was expressed. Both speak for themselves.

The Semi-annual Examination of the School took place last week. It was, during the first four days, for the most part conducted in writing, while on the fifth day, orally. The written exercises evince the efficiency with which the pupils are taught in English, French, Latin and Greek, &c. On Friday, which was the more public examination day, a number of the parents of the pupils and others were present. It would be encouraging to the teachers if more of the parents were there. In the Common School Department, the pupils on the whole acquitted themselves well. In general, their reading was good, and they appear to be pretty expert in solving questions in arithmetic, especially mental arithmetic. The examination of the Grammar School Department showed how efficiently and thoroughly the pupils are drilled in the classics and mathematics. The marked progress made in these branches, during the last six months, is highly creditable to the Principal, whose zeal and energy in promoting the best interests of the school are indefatigable. I question if the school at any former period was more efficiently conducted than at the present time. On Friday evening last, in the large hall of the building, the prizes in the shape of very handsome books were presented to the successful competitors. The respectable attendance on that occasion indicated the deep interest taken by the public in that part of the exercises. It must be very gratifying both to the teachers and an appreciating public to find our Grammar and Union School in so prosperous a state.

A WELL-WISHER OF THE SCHOOL.
Peterboro', Dec. 23, 1861.

ADDRESS.

Respected Teacher,—It is with feelings of deep regret that we contemplate the loss we are about to sustain in the severance of your connection with us.

As is too frequently the case with mankind, not fully to appreciate their advantages until they are past, so has it been with us in this instance. For, although we have ever considered it a high privilege to be favored with the instructions of one so kind, attentive, indulgent, and so incessantly interested in our success, yet have we never until now fully realized how much we were indebted, for our comfort, cheerfulness, harmonious feeling, and progress in our studies, to your habitual affability and kindness.

But now fully realizing these things, it is with saddened hearts we come to bid you farewell.

However, though grieved at our loss, we are not so selfish as to desire that your individual happiness should be sacrificed, or even retarded, to promote ours. On the contrary, though the relation which has subsisted between us now ceases, be assured we will ever rejoice in your happiness, and shall always retain in grateful remembrance your efforts to promote our welfare.

As a memento of our affectionate regard, please accept this small offering at our hands, and when you look at it may the consciousness of duty discharged ever prove a source of pleasure to you. Remember, also, that you still live in the memory of your grateful pupils. And if, in the order of God's providence, any of us rise to positions of eminence or usefulness in society, let this little gift remind you of the pleasing fact that by your example and influence you assisted in preparing us for the performance of duty.

But, before we part, allow us to request forgiveness for any wrong which at any time we may have committed, or anything which seemed to imply disrespect for your authority, and be assured that no such feeling ever prompted any of our actions.

And now, dear teacher, we bid you farewell, praying that the choicest blessings of Heaven may rest upon you; that the greatest amount of sublunary happiness vouchsafed to mortals may fall to your lot; that a long and useful life may be granted to you, and that when the weary wheels of life stand still, you may meet your affectionate pupils in Heaven, where the word "Farewell" is never heard.

(Signed by the Committee, in behalf of the scholars belonging to the Union School.)

REPLY.

My Dear Pupils,—I accept with much pleasure your beautiful gift, and thank you for it most sincerely; at the same time, however, I feel that I can never thank you sufficiently for the kind and generous sentiments which prompted its bestowal. As an expression of these feelings, apart from its intrinsic value, I shall ever prize your offering, and preserve it with the greatest care; and I need scarcely assure you, that I shall never forget those from whom I received it.

In looking back over the past few weeks I can scarcely realize that the last hour has really come,—the last time that I shall meet you here in the pleasant relation of teacher to pupils,—the last time that I can look around on your familiar faces and feel that I have a right to your love and respect.

Though I have sometimes, in moments of weariness, looked almost impatiently for this hour, yet, now that it has really come, I could even wish to put it off, and thus defer the pain of parting. But this may not be; and now that I shall probably never have another opportunity of speaking to you all, I wish to express in some measure my gratitude for the love and kindness you have shown me during the two years I have been with you.

I came among you a stranger, and with only the fact that I was to be your teacher to recommend me to your interest. Away from my home and friends, and depending on you for a great deal of my comfort and happiness, whether I should be happy or otherwise in my new position, I could not then determine. Not many weeks went by, however, till I found I was among friends, and a pleasant relation was established between us, which has continued to exist without interruption, and has now become so dear that I cannot sever it without feelings of the deepest pain.

Though I have always seriously felt the importance of the teacher's office, I think I have never realized so fully as now, when I am leaving it, the great responsibility of my position.

When I reflect how many characters I have had an influence in moulding—how many minds I have fondly purposed to develope—[illegible] influence I may have left on the unwritten life-pages of so many of you, I tremble at the thought; and I pray most earnestly that whatever of good, whatever principles of honor, whatever sentiments of kindness and forbearance, whatever love of the Beautiful and True, I have tried to inculcate, may be impressed and strengthened, and increase till they become a part of your very natures; and that whatever of evil I have been the means of encouraging, either by precept or example, may be blotted out from your hearts and forgotten forever.

In parting with the teachers and scholars of this school, I feel that I am leaving no mere acquaintances. I look round upon you and every face is the face of a friend. I count this a high privilege, and I am convinced that in no future sphere of life can I ever be so fortunate.

I cannot refrain from embracing this opportunity of tendering my warmest thanks to you, my fellow-teachers, for the large share of kindness I have received at your hands. My acquaintance with some of you dates from my entering the school, while some others have come among us more recently. To all of you, however, I say "farewell" with feelings of regret; but one of the best wishes I have for the pupils of this school is that they may long be favored with your instructions and example.

And now, again, dear pupils, I would thank you, and bid you farewell. May God bless you all! And if on earth I meet with you no more, may we all meet in that beautiful land above,

Where no shadow ever falleth,
Where life's busy dream is o'er,
Where dear friends may be united,
To be parted never more.

The climate is a terrible enemy to Northern soldiers at Port Royal. Of General Sherman's 16,000 men in one month 500 had been on the sick list.

Slaves continue to be landed in Cuba, and the Captain-General of the Faithful Islands continues to pocket doubloons for allowing them to be landed. In this way he more than doubles his salary.

We understand that the Pilot who took the "Jura" down the river from Quebec, was unable to land owing to the inclemency of the weather, and had in consequence to go on to England. When there he was sent for by the military authorities, and sent back to make preliminary arrangements for the reception of troops and military stores at Bic, he being a merchant of that place, and well acquainted with the surrounding country. The authority for this statement is one of the Mail Conductors, and we believe it is reliable.—Montreal Gazette.

Feeding an Army.—To feed the 600,000 troops now in the Union army, there is required each month 14,025,000 pounds of pork, or 24,375,000 pounds of fresh beef; 136,995 barrels of flour; 48,750 bushels of beans, or 1,950,000 pounds of rice; 1,950,000 gallons vinegar; 12,449 bushels of salt; 8,580,000 pounds of potatoes. The supply of candles is 292,500 pounds each week, and of soap 780,000 pounds!

Death by Poison.—A farmer, Mr Henry Jones, of Thurlow, died about a fortnight ago, from the effects of eating "Water Hemlock," a deadly poison, which he and other members of the family had mistaken for "Spignet Root." Mr Jones had eaten of the poison about an hour previous to the others, and to this circumstance may be added the fact that his brother and two grown up daughters did not lose their lives, for as soon as it was discovered that he was poisoned, they used the usual remedies of people residing in the country to produce vomiting, until the arrival of Dr. Lester, who was immediately summoned. By the care of Dr. Lester, the rest of the family were saved; but Mr Jones was too far gone for medical assistance to be of any avail, he died in a short time after the arrival of the doctor. This is a melancholy example, and should be a warning to others to be cautious in gathering roots and herbs, the properties of which they are not thoroughly acquainted with.

Shocking Accident in Oswego.—An accident of a most shocking nature occurred on Monday at the Pearl Mills in Oswego.—Ferdinand Yarkie, a young German sixteen years of age, was sharpening a hatchet at a grindstone in the basement, when he was in some manner caught in the belting connected with an upright shaft near by. The shaft was making about 200 revolutions per minute, and at every revolution the deceased was thrown against the wall on one side, against a shaft on another, and against a flight of stairs on a third. Thus in a single minute he must have received six hundred blows, any one of which was sufficient to cause instant death. The noise of the blows was heard by John McKinnie, a laborer, on the floor above, and the wheel was stopped with all possible haste. The body of the poor boy was found mangled in the belt.—The upper half of his head was found completely gone, his right arm was torn off at the elbow, his left arm broken in several places, and his limbs beaten to a mass of jelly.

The Cornwall Freeholder reports that Mr Benjamin has been appointed to the office of secretary of the Bureau of Agriculture, rendered vacant by the death of Mr. Dutton.

The execution of Mahon took place at Goderich on the 19th inst., at 11 o'clock a. m., in the presence of some 3000 spectators, many of whom were women and children. He died instantaneously. He endeavored to pray, but suddenly rose from his knees and exclaimed, "I cannot pray, I am going to be murdered for that Orange business." He trembled violently, and was very much afraid to die.

The Paris correspondent of the Post asserts that peaceful anticipations prevailed among the Americans in Paris, and says that Minister Dayton and Consul Bigelow used all their influence, combined with that of General Scott, to inspire conciliatory councils at Washington. He asserts that the French Government desires peace between England and America.

The same writer also, in reference to General Scott's return, says it is not impossible that France, if asked, may become the mediator, and at the same time, the laws of neutrality may be revised, provided England, according to the wishes of other European Governments, agrees to a modification of the existing code.

The Paris correspondent of the London Globe says, that Thouvenel's despatch to M. Mercier, at Washington, is known to have confined the Federal executive to the simple dilemma, "Are the Southerners belligerents or rebels?" They have been flatly refused any rights in the first capacity, and in the second, the right of asylum acquired by political refugees has been set at nought, and France must make the case of the Trent substantially her own.

The first intimation of the illness of the Prince was had on Tuesday, Dec. 3, when it was stated that he had been suffering from a feverish cold. The first bulletin in regard to his condition was issued on Wednesday, Dec. 11. It stated that the Prince was suffering from a fever unattended by unfavourable symptoms. On the following day a bulletin announced that the Prince had passed a quiet night, but that his symptoms had undergone little change. A bulletin on Friday stated that his symptoms had assumed a more serious form. A bulletin issued at 9 o'clock was more favorable. At half past 6 yesterday afternoon a bulletin was issued as follows: "His Royal Highness is in a more critical state." From that hour his symptoms commenced to take a more unfavorable turn. A fever of a typhoid character set in. The Prince then continued to sink gradually until the last gleam of hope departed, and he expired tranquilly at ten minutes to eleven.

The Queen and the Royal family surrounded the death-bed of the Prince.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says the general belief is that General Scott has gone back with the intention of enlightening the Washington Cabinet as to the ideas of the French Government. He is doubtless acquainted with the opinions of the Emperor, and that it is not favourable to President Lincoln's policy. Gen. Scott will probably convince his countrymen that they cannot count on the moral support of France. Something is also said of his being charged to propose the mediation of the French Government.

Commander Williams, R. N., who is in charge of the mails on board the Trent, was entertained at dinner by the Royal Western Yacht Club. He gave an account of the affair with the San Jacinto, differing in almost every detail from the accounts published in the American journals. He flatly denied the statements made by Lieutenant Fairfax, saying that he parted with him after mutual apologies in case of personal offence had been given on both sides. As to the seizure being unauthorised the San Jacinto was at St. Thomas on the 14th or 15th October, and when Commander Williams returned to Havana on the 6th of November, he found that the San Jacinto had been to Havana from St. Thomas. She had coaled there, and two of her officers, passing themselves off as Southerners in their hearts, had lunched with Mr. Slidell and his family, and extracted from them their intended movements. Miss Slidell branded one of the officers to his face with his infamy, telling him that he had been her father's guest not ten days before. Commander Williams concluded his speech by stating that he had received the approbation of his Government by the following letter from his immediate chief, which he then read amidst much applause:

Southampton, Dec. 3.

With reference to your letter of the 9th ult., detailing the circumstances under which Messrs. Mason and Slidell, Commissioners from the so-styled Confederate States of North America, to this country and France, with their Secretaries, were forcibly taken out of the Trent, a contract steamer, on the 8th of November, in Bahama channel, by an armed party of officers and men from the San Jacinto—a U. S. steamer of war—I am commanded by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to convey to you their Lordships' approval of your conduct whilst acting as naval agent on board the Trent on the occasion in question, and also of the judicious steps you substantially took for making the matter known to Lord Lyons and Vice-Admiral Milne, and other British authorities.

ARRIVAL OF THE "PERSIA" AT EIC.

Landing of Troops and Stores!

Quebec, Dec. 26.

The Persia arrived about a mile and a half from the shore off Bic.

About 600 men are being at once shore tonight. These will start for Rivere Du Loup about midday to-morrow in carioles procured from the country people in the vicinity.

The men are provided with winter clothing, and until they start for Riviere Du Loup will be comfortably housed at Bic.

The harbour is perfectly free from ice; the landing is being effected by means of the ship's boats.

The Persia will proceed at once to Riviere Du Loup for the purpose of landing stores, unless it is found to be impracticable.

There is not much ice in the channel a Riviere Du Loup, and military men at that station are of opinion that men and stores could have been landed there without difficulty.

Should the Persia not proceed to Riviere Du Loup, 20 canoes and 100 men will leave Riviere Du Loup in the morning for Bic, to assist at the landing of stores.

The telegraph line will remain open all night.

FURTHER BY THE "NIAGARA."

HIGHLY IMPORTANT.

The West India mail has taken to England news of the escape of the Sumpter from Martinique; as also that on the 28th Nov. the Sumpter captured the American ship Montmorenci, from Newport, England, with coals for the St. Lawrence, but released her on a receipt of bond by the Captain, promising to pay $96,000 three months after peace was proclaimed.

The British war vessel Cadmus had arrived at St. Thomas, to protect vessels against another Trent affair.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The attitude of and preparations by England show no change.

The London Times editorially reports the following story: During the visit of the Prince of Wales to America, Mr. Seward took advantage of an entertainment to the Prince to tell the Duke of Newcastle he was likely to occupy a high office; that when he did so it would become his duty to insult England, and he should insult her accordingly. The Times accumulates evidence of a long cherished intention on the part of Seward to England an injury.

In another leader on the intercolonial affairs of civil war the Times advises the Federal Government to make peace in time, before it is committed to a treble war, viz., with the Confederates, the British, and its own Abolitionists.

A telegram from Brussels of the 12th to the Times says: "There is a rumour in diplomatic circles that mediation in the American conflict will be offered by King Leopold."

The Secretary of the British Legation had left for London.

The Morning Post says there is no truth in the rumour that Gen Scott's sudden return home was the theme of much speculation. It was generally reported that he had some sort of a mission from the French Government to the Washington Cabinet. The Herald's Paris correspondent says he had a long interview with M. Thouvenel before his departure.

The great impression in financial circles was that he carried out a momentous communication from the French Government.

It is [illegible] that these vessels were are to be sent to Canada, to be ready to take the field immediately on landing.

The British Government continued to charter all available steamers.

Two battalions of the British Guards were expected to sail on the 18th inst. in the steamers Adriatic and Panama, under the command of Lord F. Paulet.

Orders have been issued for the hasty manufacture of 2,000 pack saddles, and a proportionate number of ambulance waggons and cars for despatch to Canada.

Col. R. R Wetherall is gazetted as Chief of the Staff in Canada and Majors General Prinsley and David Russell are ordered to embark forthwith and join the Staff.

The united prayer meeting, at Exeter Hall, took place on the 12th instant, as announced. Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel, and other ministers participated in the proceedings, and fervent prayers were offered up for peace.

Lord Shaftesbury declined to attend the meeting, stating in his reply to an invitation to do so that it would be interpreted by the bulk of the Press, and by Americans as a cloked rebuke of the british Government, and favour the opinion that the contrary was not united on this serious question. He commended the purpose of the meeting but though it would be better carried into effect by private and congregational means.

At a meeting of the Congregational Board resolutions were adopted deprecating hostilities, and calling for arbitration if diplomacy fails to secure peace.

A circular issued by the Minister of Commerce to the mercantile bodies, says, measures are to be adopted for the protection of merchant vessels, in case hostilities break out between England and the United States.

It was asserted that Prince Napoleon continued to argue against the recognition of the Southern States, and that he was instrumental in causing General Scott to go to Washington.

MASON & SLIDELL SURRENDERED!

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.

Messrs. Mason and Slidell have been given up to England.

The official correspondence between our Government and Great Britain, relative to the seizure of the traitors, Slidell and Mason, is received.

The first is a letter from Secretary Seward to Minister Adams, dated Nov. 30th, in which he compliments the latter for wisely speaking and acting at the Lord Mayor's dinner, and also states that he told Lord Palmerston simply the fact when informing him that the line of the insurrection was sustained by the hopes of its recognition by England and France, and if these hopes ceased the insurrection would perish in ninety days.

He referred in the same note to the fact of the arrest of Slidell and Mason by Capt. Wilkes as a new and unforseen circumstance which is to be met by the two Governments, if possible, in kindly spirits.

Lord Lyons had said nothing on the subject, and no explanations were furnished Minister Adams, it being deemed prudent that the ground taken by the British Government should first be made known here and discussion be had here; but Secretary Seward deemed it proper to state that Capt. Wilkes acted without instructions, and the subject is, therefore, free from embarrassment, which might have ensued if this act had been specially directed.

He trusts the British Government will consider the subject in a friendly temper, and it may expect the best disposition on our part.

The next letter is from Earl Russell to Lord Lyons, dated Nov. 30th, which details the Trent affair.

He says, "It thus appears that certain individuals had been forcibly taken from a British vessel, the ship of a neutral power, on a lawful and innocent voyage—an act of violence which was an affront to the British flag and a violation of international law.

"Her Majesty's Government are willing to believe the act was without authority and resulted from a misunderstanding, as the Government of the United States must be fully aware. The British Government would not allow such an affront to the national honour to be passed without full reparation, and the British Government is unwilling to believe that the United States deliberately intended unnecessarily to force a discussion of so grave a question between the two Governments.

"Her Majesty's Government trusts that the Government of the United States will of its own accord offer such redress as alone could satisfy them, viz., the liberation of the four persons, and their delivery to Lord Lyons, that they may again be placed under British authority, and a suitable apology for the aggression committed.

"Should these terms not be offered by Mr. Seward, you will propose them to him."

Mr. Seward replies to Lord Lyons, by whom he was furnished with a copy of Earl Russell's letter stating that the despatch has been submitted to the President.

Mr. Seward states that "the British Government rightly conjectured what is now his duty to state that Captain Wilkes acted upon his own suggestions of duty, without any direction, or intimation, or even forenowledge of it on the part of this Government.

"No directions had been given him or any naval officer to arrest the four persons or any of them on the Trent, or any other British vessel, or any neutral vessel there or elsewhere." After discussing the whole subject at great length in all its bearings, Mr. Seward says:—"I trust I have shown to the satisfaction of the British Government, by a very simple and natural statement of facts, and analysis of laws applicable to them, that this Government have neither meditated, nor practised, nor approved any deliberate wrong in the transaction to which they have called its attention; and on the contrary, that what has thus happened has been simply an inadvertency consisting in a departure by the naval officer, free from any wrongful motive, from a rule uncertainly established, and probably by the several parties concerned either imperfectly understood or entirely unknown. For, this error the British Government has a right to expect the same reparation that we as an independent State should expect from Great Britain, or from any other friendly nation, as a similar case."

"I have not been aware that in assuming this question I have fallen into an argument for what seems to be a British side of it against my own country, but I am relieved from all embarrassment on that subject."

"I had hardly fallen into that line of argument when I discovered that I was really finding myself maintaining not exactly British interests but an old, and honored, and cherished American cause, not upon British authorities, but upon principles that constitute a large portion of the distinctive glory of which the United States have derived the dignities of a Continent, and have become a conspicuous [illegible]

WISDOM FOR WINTER.

Never go to bed with cold or damp feet.

In going into colder air, breathe through the nose.

Flannel next the skin is the best protection to pass circumstantially through the head and nose, it may become ignited before it reaches the lungs, and thus prevent those changes and motions which frequently end in pleurisy, pneumonia and other serious forms of disease.

Never stand still a moment out of doors, especially at street corners, after having walked rapidly.

Never ride near the open window of a vehicle for a single half minute, especially if it has been preceded by a walk; valuable lives—more than in battle, or good health permanently destroyed.

Never wear India rubber boots in cold dry weather.

Those who are easily chilled on going out of doors should have some cotton batting attached to the vest or outer garment, so as to protect the organs between the shoulder-blades [illegible] attached to the body at that point; a little there is worth five times the amount over the chest in front.

Never begin a journey until breakfast is eaten.

After speaking, singing or preaching, in a warm room in winter, do not leave it for at least 10 minutes, and brush the dust from the mouth, put on the gloves, wrap up the neck and put on a cloak or overcoat before passing out of the door; the neglect of these has laid many a good and useful man in a premature grave.

Never speak under a hoarseness, especially if it is required—or utter, or gives a hurting or painful feeling; for it often results in a permanent loss of voice or a long life of invalidism.—Hall's Journal of Health.

TREES FOR WINTER.

No class of plants are more costly and turns made worse off of than evergreens. For shelter there is nothing like the Norway Spruce, yet we see many gardens and houses exposed to the northern blasts without an evergreen or tree of any kind to break the force of these winter winds. Other gardens are literally filled with evergreens, and this gives them a dark and gloomy appearance. For a screen, of course, the rows must be planted close in rows, but on the lawn, for beauty, here and there a [illegible] intermixed with other trees are all that is required. Trees with bright berries, like the Mountain Ash and Ebonymus are very desirable, and give to the winter season a bright and lively look. A correspondent thinks that evergreens, and especially evergreen shrubs, are not located in this country, and writes us to urge our readers to give more attention to this beautiful class. It is true that there is no country where evergreens are more needed than our own. Without them, how cheerless and desolate our gardens appear full five months of the year. Our attempts to introduce new evergreens, however, have not always been rewarded with success, as many things a which we had strong hopes have proved too tender for our severe climate. Thus our most beautiful native evergreen shrubs, such as the Holly, the Rhododendron, and the Kalmia, are difficult to remove, and do not live well with common treatment and in an ordinary soil. They are not generally propogated or planted, and deserve far more attention from both nurserymen and amateurs than they have received. We have however, many beautiful evergreen trees that will grow as easily as a Poplar, and are hardy enough for any climate between this and the Polar Sea.

A farmer's son, during a lesson in astronomy, was asked by the teacher if he knew what was meant by the milky-way. He intelligently replied, "why, sir, 'tis the way as comes from the cheese."

A perfect Antidote, Specific and Cure for

has long been needed. After [illegible] and patient research, this [illegible] has [illegible] Watson's Neuralgia King!

Watson's Neuralgia King reaches the source of the trouble, and banishes the disease from the system. Unlike the untold number of Liniments and Embrocations which merely stimulate the surface, are but temporary in their effects, and are, at best, of doubtful virtue, it REMOVES THE CAUSE of the ailment, ARRESTS IT, KILLS IT, ERADICATES IT, and leaves no trace behind.

Watson's Neuralgia King also cures GOUT AND DYSPEPSIA, in all their forms. It is now giving relief to thousands who have been suffering from these diseases, and who have tried all other remedies in vain.

Watson's Neuralgia King has received the highest testimonials from the highest sources in regard to its wonderful efficacy. It operates with equal success in mild and chronic cases, never failing to work out a speedy and permanent cure.

Watson's Neuralgia King costs but one dollar a bottle, and less than a bottle often effects the end desired.

Watson's Neuralgia King is the only Specific and cure for Rheumatism and Neuralgia that has ever been discovered.

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

Above, we present you with a perfect likeness of Tecuco, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once existed therein. You will read a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlet and Almanacs, to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "Mountain Herb Pills" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanacs and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or [illegible] matter gets mixed with it, it is at once dispatched to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the [illegible] and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become disturbed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life goes also out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. This Anti Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and restores all the fluids and secretions pure and fluent, cleansing and reconstituting the vital organs.

Pleasant indeed, is it to us, that we are able to place within your reach, a medicine like the "Mountain Herb Pills," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to brighten with the flush of health and joy.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

☞ The Pimples and Blotches of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Pastures, 6 miles of Shanghae of Mexico. See the Almanacs of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account of [illegible] of the "Great Mountain of the Moon."

Observe.—The Mountain Herb Pills are put up in a Beautiful Wrapper. Each box contains 50 pills, and Retail at 25 cents per box. All genuine, have the Signature of S. L. JUDSON & Co., on each box.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which foster in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many sickling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing the above ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall restore the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. Its power to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle, has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people that they may keep up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and for Purifying the Blood.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

Price 25 cents per Box; Five boxes for $1.00.

Great numbers of Clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent Philanthropists, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled excellence of these remedies, but our space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given, with also full descriptions of the above complaints, and the treatment that should be followed for their cure.

Do not be persuaded to buy sarsaparilla, or pills, in other preparations they may make more profit on Dr. Ayer's, and take no others. The best physicians all over the country prescribe them, and the people know it.

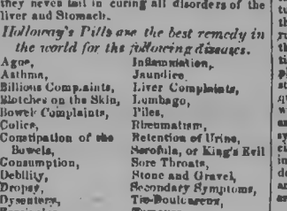
Health and its Pleasures, OR DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES!

WHOSE BETWEEN THEM.



HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be irritable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for what can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; eat all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially the power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally admitted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins near the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief where all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

Ague,	Inflammation,
Asthma,	Jaundice,
Bilious Complaints,	Liver Complaints,
Blotches on the Skin,	Lumbago,
Bowel Complaints,	Piles,
Colics,	Rheumatism,
Constipation of the Bowels,	Retention of Urine,

☞ CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. Ayer's Sarsaparilla

THE CARRIER BOY'S ADDRESS, 1862.

Once more I am before you,
My patrons all dear,
With my usual 'Merry Christmas,
And Happy New-year,"
May many joyous seasons
Of peace and plenty fill,
Return to you patrons,
Well guarded from all ill.
Since last I did address you
Great changes have transpired
In all the world around us,
On this and every side:

Our country has been menaced
By a haughty, bragging foe,
And war's wild notes have sounded
A call for all to go,
To defend our loved country
From a ruthless foreign band,
Who would force us 'gainst our wishes
From our honored Fatherland.
But brave hearts and dauntless spirits,
Ever ready for the right,
Have boldly forward entered,
To battle with their might.
If their country forth should call them,
Home and pleasures all behind
Will be left, and onward pressing
Hoo-ra-ed victory they'll find.

The sword may now be sheathed—
Heaven grant it may be long—
But still let us remember,
In our standing firm and strong,
And inseparably united,
Among ourselves so free,
Will the charter of our safety
And our freedom ever be.
While we're an armed nation
We may have little fears;
Our trust against invasion
Is in our Volunteers.

But list! a voice of warning,
Or advice 't may rather be—
Let us stop this mean accusing
Of our neighbors' loyalty.
Because a man may differ,
In opinions fair and just,
Let us never basely slur him,
Or bring on him distrust.

But enough! I hear a wailing
Coming o'er the dark blue main,
The honored Prince of Gotha
By the hand of death is slain,
And a nation's grief is poignant,
For the Royal relict, left
To mourn the sad departure,
—Queen and Princes are bereft.—

But Death is no respecter,
And well that it is so,
Let us reversand, all ready,
When the call comes for to go.
If our actions have been proper,
And our life to Him been near,
We may meet the dark-winged angel,
Without a frown or fear.

Fain would I these poor lines lengthen
But space compels me now
To kindly thank you, patrons,
And politely make my bow.
For long 12 months more I'll truly
To your dwellings constant take
The stores of knowledge in my trade.
THEN PRAY BE A PRESENT MADE.

LIFE IN ROME.

The London Daily News correspondent, writing from Rome, on the 28th Nov., says:—

We are told that the unsettled state of the country would prevent many people from coming to Rome this winter, but we find a great many strangers here, both English and American, and the general impression is that there is at present at least no danger of political disturbances. We hear much of the lawless states alone in the streets after dark. Robberies are frequent in parts of Rome. A gentleman, a foreigner, was attacked the other evening in the Piazza d'Espagna by a band of men, and one interfered for his protective or defence, and he was robbed of his watch, purse, &c. We traveled from Civita Vecchia with a French officer who told us there were 20,000 French troops here. We have since heard there are 28,000. They are to be seen everywhere, in the churches, palaces, and streets. It would be fearful to be at the mercy of the brigand-looking Neapolitan troops we sometimes see, who, we are told, are fit for any atrocity. They are brought together and supported by Francis II. We have already heard much of the vagaries of the ex-Queen of Naples, who is quite one of the notabilities of Rome. She and her sister drive much about on the Pincio every day, and, for many other reasons besides being young and handsome, attract much attention. All the world has heard, to use a mild term, of the eccentricities of the Queen, and as long as they were confined to smoking cigars, and shooting every unfortunate stray dog, cat, or bird, however questionable the taste and humanity of the amusement, it did not much matter; but the Roman world, English and American at least, is much shocked at present by the report that some few days ago, for some trifling correctness, she shot one of her ladies in waiting. No one seems to doubt the truth of the report, and we were told to-day, by a person apparently well-informed, that the clothes of the unfortunate victim were not set on fire to make the death appear accidental. I give you the story as we hear it. The ex royal family are so unpopular that a story is more apt to lose in the telling—the "diavolo" is not as black as he is painted, and I must just tell you the story of the photographs. A number of photographs of the Queen have been selling here lately, and some enemy got a number of nude figures done from some model here, with the head of the Queen, and endorsed one as if from herself to the Pope, cardinal, and archbishop of Rome. The police have been endeavoring to find out the perpetrators, but have as yet got no clue.

We have been several times to St. Peter's; there have been some festivals lately. There is a very celebrated singer in the Pope's chapel named Mustapha, that nearly does good to hear. He has a wonderful voice, an alto, that is actually velvet, soft, rich and powerful like a fine instrument. The day before yesterday, St. Peter's Day, there was a grand procession, headed by the Pope and all the cardinals, archbishops, &c., &c., &c. It was a splendid sight, but we to-day, have had a much better and more favorable opportunity of seeing His Holiness; was right in front of Pope's throne at Mass, and heard him sing. He has a very weak voice, but sings in a pure tone. We went in the morning to the Church of St. Cecilia, which is built on the site of the house in which she lived. The church was most gorgeously decorated, with pale blue, crimson and gold-colored curtains, with profuse gold lace and fringe, and brilliantly illuminated, as we had reason to experience from the droppings of wax on our garments, and filled with a numerous audience. High mass was performed. There were three cardinals and many ecclesiastical dignitaries in magnificent costumes, and some fine music, Mustapha being there. Among the audience we saw Liszt, the celebrated musician. In the afternoon we heard the catacombs of Solistes, where the body of St. Cecilia was found, were to be lighted up, and we thought it would be a favorable opportunity to see them. The afternoon was lovely—the purple hills of Alzano and the broken arches of the Claudian aqueduct looked glorious, gilded by the rich sun light as we drove rapidly round outside the grand old walls of Rome, along the same Appian way over which victorious legions marched to the capitol. The usual entrance to the catacombs is by the Church of St. Sebastian, but the cemetery of St. Calixtus, in which the body of St. Cecilia was found, was opened on this occasion.—The number of carriages and pedestrians, among which were many priests, gave notice of something unusual, although I believe few expected what did occur. We got to a small door in a wall, beset with the nuisance of Rome, a number of most importunate beggars, shewing, as in Jerusalem of old, their infirmities. We followed a number of people up a few steps, and after crossing a sort of half field, half garden, came to rather a steep staircase which we descended, and walked along a dimly lighted passage, from which others branched off in differ nt directions in the most intricate and labyrinthine manner. Some times these passages expand into arched chambers which would contain many people. On each side of the passage are cut in the soft rock cavities in which are placed the bodies of the dead, some with quite legible inscriptions; a small lamp and vial containing blood, marked the tomb of a martyr. It seemed strange to be wandering among the tombs in which the early Christians were perhaps laid seventeen centuries ago, some of whom might have listened to the voice of St. Peter or St. Paul! The atmosphere is very peculiar and oppressive, stifling, and smelling of earth and dust. Not far from the entrance we came to one of the arched chambers I have mentioned, in which was found the body of St. Cecilia. A likeness, anything but flattering certainly, of the saint is cut out on the wall, and there were wreaths of flowers hung near a small table covered with white cloth, before which a jolly looking priest was telling a number of people who had assembled there incidents of the birth, life and death of the Saint, in a pleasant conversational tone. When we had seen all we came for, we were glad to return to the sweet upper air and bright sunshine, and we were enjoying this and idly gazing at the line of carriages drawn up along the road when two horsemen, in uniforms of dark blue and silver, rode up, and we saw two carriages, each drawn by four black horses, approaching. We thought, perhaps, a cardinal and some, but there was a murmur among the people where we stood of "The Pope, the Pope!" and a great gleam of satisfaction over the faces of the many priests near us. The carriages drove up, the Pope alighted, followed by some cardinals in violet robes, and entered the small door. He gave his benediction, and some money, to the kneeling beggars. Some priests, and two gentlemen in ordinary costume, advanced to meet him, with low bows and smiles, whom he received most courteously, and they accompanied him on each side, as he came on smiling and talking where we stood.—He was dressed in a long snow-white robe, with a white silk sash, a gold chain and cross round his neck, a large signet ring, and a broad brimmed crimson hat. Many people knelt as he passed; we bowed, as a proper act of homage to a sovereign, and ex pression of sympathy for an aged human being placed in a trying and painful position. We walked all the way across the garden quite close to him. He conversed cheerfully, almost mirthfully, with the surrounding gentlemen, from time to time stopping to bless those who knelt before him. Many ladies, in long crinolines, knelt down, and while he supported himself on the shoulders of two priests, devoutedly kissed the toe of his scarlet slipper. Some English ladies kissed his hand. All was done smilingly and cheerfully. When he reached the catacombs he was met by the same priest who had addressed the people at the tomb of Cecilia, and he descended the stairs, and we all followed in a quiet orderly manner. No English crowd would behave so well on so exciting an occasion; there was no rush or crowding as we went along the narrow passage to the arched chamber before mentioned. Here the Pope, cardinals, and priests knelt for some time in silent devotion, and then passed out by another opening, and returned very leisurely to his carriage, in the bright sunshine, through the same respectful crowd; some more beckoning, a good many prostrations of ladies by the attendant priests and gentlemen, some benedictions, and then he entered his carriage and drove off. There were a few cpuzz, the most energetic from an English lady near, who enthusiastically waved her handkerchief.

QUEER COUNTRY.

A letter from the Honorable county in California says:—The pagans professes a religion of mahogany, the apostolic gravity of which is to some time water, and a head of stone the apostle gravity of which is from time water. A proselyting party burned here some time, evidently a spark in Wilkie's river where this enable being stole down a hill. One of the company threw into the river a piece of mahogany—it sunk; it threw in a piece of pumice stone and it floated! This was put more forcible illustration human nature, and adds an illustration more expressive than eloquent, to show he would go to the dogs, "should they [illegible] good behaviour, and [illegible] of the Gospel.

A FORTUNATE KISS.

The following pretty little story is narrated by Fredrika Bremer, who vouches for its truthfulness:

In the University of Upsala, in Sweden, lived a young student, a noble youth, with a great love for studies, but without the means for pursuing them. He was poor, and without connections. Still he studied, living in great poverty, but keeping a cheerful heart and trying to look brightly at the future, which looked so gloomy at him. His good humor and excellent qualities made him beloved by his young comrades. Once he was standing with some of them in the great square of Upsala, prattling away an hour of leisure, when the attention of the young men became arrested by a young and elegant lady, who, at the side of an elderly one, was slowly walking over the place. It was the only daughter of the Governor of Upland, living in the city, and the lady with her was the governess. She was generally known for her goodness and gentleness of character, and looked upon with admiration by all the students. As the men stood gazing at her, as she passed on, like a graceful vision, one of them suddenly exclaimed:

"Well, it would be worth something to have a kiss from such a mouth!"

The poor student, the hero of our story, who looked on that pure angelic face, exclaimed, as if by inspiration:

"Well, I think I could have it!"

"What!" cried his friends in a chorus, "are you crazy? Do you know her?"

"Not at all!" he answered; "but I think she would kiss me now if I asked her."

"What! in this place—before all our eyes!"

"Freely!"

"Freely."

"Well, if she will give you a kiss in that manner, I will give you a thousand dollars!" said one of the party.

"And I,"—"and I," exclaimed three or four others; for it so happened that several rich young men were in the group, and the bets ran high on so improbable an event.—The challenge was made and received in less time than we take to tell it.

Our hero (my authority tells not whether he was handsome or plain; I have my peculiar ideas for believing that he was rather plain, but singularly good looking at the same time) immediately walked off to the young lady, and said:

"Mine frolen, my fortune is now in your hands."

She looked at him in astonishment, but arrested her steps. He proceeded to state his name and condition, his aspirations, and related, simply and truly what had just now passed between him and his companions.

The young lady listened attentively, but said with great sweetness:

"If by so little a thing so much good can be effected, it would be foolish for me to refuse your request;" and publicly in the open square, she kissed him.

Next day the student was sent for by the Governor. He wanted to see the man who dared to seek a kiss from his daughter in that way, and whom she had consented to kiss so. He received him with a scrutinizing bow, but after an hour's conversation, was so pleased with him that he invited him to dine at his table during his studies at Upsala.

Our young friend pursued his studies in a manner which soon made him regarded as the most promising student in the University.

Three years were now passed since the day of the first kiss, when the young man was allowed to give a second one to the daughter of the Governor, as his intended bride.

He became, later, one of the greatest scholars in Sweden, and as much respected for his acquirements as for his character.—His works will endure while time lasts, among the works of science; and from this happy union sprang a family well known in Sweden even at the present time, and whose wealth and high position in society are regarded as trifles in comparison with the wealth of goodness and love.

For the Examiner.

ENIGMA.

The foundation of this Enigma is in Holy Writ, and Hebrew is the language.
M. Cmdn. 29, 1.

My father and mother is one man, yet my mother and father are two.
My father is a woman, and she is my mother, yet my father is a man like other men.
The birth-day of my mother is the birth-day of my father,
Yet my mother was not born on the day that my father was born.
The day on which my mother married me was that on which my father wedded me.
A child sucking my mother's breast, also sucks the breast of my father.
He who transgresses my mother's commands, behold he transgresses the precepts of my father.
During the time that my mother sleeps, wakefulness is not permitted to my father.
It is also impossible for my mother to go out whilst my father is asleep.
Who can say, that the day on which my mother died was the bitter day of my father's death.
Yet truly the day of the resurrection of my mother will be the day on which my father will be restored to life.

A NEW ENIGMA.

Translated from the Hebrew.

We understand it is determined by the military authorities shortly to construct a telegraph communication with Montreal, which, when completed, will be of the greatest importance in the event of the commencement of the line.

THE THREE P's.

At the close of the last century, a poor, awkward, uncouth boy entered London, but he was so long, lank, and ungainly that he seemed fit only to be the drudge of a printing office—run errands, bring water, sweep the floor, and the like. Already had poverty and the hardness of the world made him sour, unhopeful and despondent. Under less discouragements, many a youth has abandoned himself to a thriftless life, having no higher aim than to live but for the day; or, worse still, has plunged headlong into all the extravagancies and indulgencies connected with thriftlessness and crime. But the boy had vigorous health—this imparted to him a mental aim, a moral power, which soon showed itself to his employer. He was prompt, persevering and painstaking; and with the other qualities, in spite of the fact that he was good at nothing, in everything tolerable only, he made his way to the "woolsack" (that is the seat of the highest judge in England,) and lately died worth a million of dollars, among the most honored men of his nation and age.—Lord Chief Justice Campbell. "His employer, seeing his dull nature, but noticing at the same time that when he had anything to do, he went at it promptly, and with great painstaking, kept at it until the work in hand was done, although painfully slow, he patted him on the shoulder, always spoke cheerfully to him, and with considerable consistency, threw little jobs in the way, by which the heavy boy might hire a little money, and be stimulated to greater activities.

DEATH OF SIR JOHN FORBES.

Sir John Forbes, M.D. physician of her Majesty's household, recently died in his 76th year. The deceased was the fourth son of the late Mr. Alexander Forbes, and was born at Castlehaine, Banffshire, in 1787. He was educated at the Edinburgh Grammar School and at Marischal College, Aberdeen, but received his medical education at the University of Edinburgh, and served for several years in the medical department of the navy. In 1816 and 1817 he was Surgeon of the Commander-in-Chief in the West Indies, where he was present in several naval engagements, and received the naval war medal. In 1817 he graduated as M.D. at Edinburgh University. In 1824 he is referred to in the British practitioner the great discovery of auscultation by [illegible] Laennec's practice, and wrote an original work on the same subject in 1824. In 1830 he was appointed physician in ordinary to the late Duke of Cambridge, a position of great honor to the profession. During the Queen's visit to Edinburgh in the following year, Sir John was one of her medical attendants. He was also one of the physicians of the Queen's Private Household, and [illegible] personal confidence of Prince Albert. In 1853, and [illegible] he was appointed one of the Commissioners in Lunacy for Scotland, and in the following year, Sir John was one of the physicians of the Crimean Hospitals. He was also one of the Commissioners of Inquiry into the Scotch Universities, and [illegible] Colleges of Physicians, Doctors of Civil Law, Fellow of the Royal Societies, and for several years examiner in medicine to the Conjoint Examining Board.

A "Drill Assembly" has been formed at Quebec, consisting of fifty persons, who have volunteered to take part in the [illegible] pot.

READY, AYE READY.

We all remember that when during the Indian mutiny, it was thought necessary to despatch Sir Colin Campbell to Calcutta to assume the command of the forces, the gallant old general gained great credit for having demanded only twelve hours to prepare for his departure. In this, however, he was outdone by the late Earl Cathcart, who when asked by Lord Hill, the then General Commander-in-Chief, what time he would require to prepare himself for active service and proceed to Canada with despatches, replied, as he rose to take his departure, after a moment's hesitation, "Half an hour my lord, but if necessary I will be ready in twenty minutes."

DIAMOND CUT DIAMOND.

On Thursday last at a place [illegible] of Edinburgh town," a dog rushed into a butcher's shop, seized hold of, and bolted off with a leg of mutton. The butcher gravely walked to a lawyer's office in the neighborhood, informing the man of law he had come to consult him about a rather important affair. He told of the dog and the leg of mutton (which he valued at 7s.), and asked if the owner of the dog was responsible for the theft. The lawyer at once said the law was quite clear on that point, and

PRINCE ALBERT'S DEATHBED.

THE LAST MOMENTS AND THE FUNERAL OF THE DECEASED.

Wealth of Queen Victoria.

(From the London Times, Dec. 16th.)

The news of the serious illness of the late Prince Consort alarmed and amazed all England on Saturday. To the attentive readers of the Court Circular it was only known that his Royal Highness was slightly indisposed, and the bulletin which on Saturday announced that his illness had taken an unfavorable turn spread dismay and astonishment throughout the country. Then, all at once, the fearful affliction which threatened her Majesty was seen, and on every side information as to the state of his Royal Highness' health was sought for with the most intense earnestness. The announcement, which we published in our third edition of Saturday, that a change slightly for the better, had taken place in the illustrious patient's condition, was welcomed as almost a relief from the state of feverish anxiety under which all had waited for news. Unhappily, this slight improvement, which raised such ardent hopes wherever it was known, proved to be but a precursor of the final issue.

During Saturday morning—at least in the early part, His Royal Highness undoubtedly felt better and, notwithstanding that his condition was of the highest degree precarious the change, though sudden, was marked, and almost justified the strong hopes which were then entertained that he would recover. The change was but for a short time, and, in fact, but one of those expiring efforts of nature which give delusive hopes to the mourners round so many death-beds. Soon afterwards his Royal Highness soon relapsed, and before the evening it became evident that it was only a question of an hour, more or less.

The Prince sank with alarming rapidity. At four the physicians issued a bulletin stating that their patient was then in "a most critical condition," which was indeed a sad truth, for by that time almost every hope of recovery had passed away.

Her Majesty, and the Prince of Wales, (who had travelled through the previous night from Cambridge), the Princess Alice and Helena, and the Prince and Princess of Leiningen, were with their illustrious relative during all this mournful and most trying period. The approach of death from exhaustion was so rapid that all stimulants failed to check the progressive increase of weakness, and the fatal termination was so clearly foreseen that even before nine o'clock on Saturday evening a despatch was forwarded from Windsor to the city, stating that the Prince Consort was then dying fast. Quietly and without suffering, he continued slowly to sink, so slowly that the watchers were powerless long before the last moment had arrived, when ere five minutes before eleven, he ceased to breath, and all was over.

An hour after and the solemn tones of the great bell of St. Paul's—a bell of evil omen—told all citizens how irreparable has been the loss of their beloved Queen, how great the loss to the country.

During yesterday the intelligence was received everywhere with a feeling so painful that it would really be difficult to exaggerate the amazement and grief manifested. The first fear—a wide, deep, and general fear—was, that the great and keen affection which has pleased Heaven in its wisdom to visit the Royal family, might prove too much for the strength of Her Majesty, and that she herself might sink under her irreparable bereavement.

A bulletin, however, posted at Buckingham Palace, stating that the Queen, though overwhelmed with grief, bore her loss with calmness, and had not then suffered in health was soon known everywhere—such was the eagerness with which news of the Queen at such a heavy time was sought for.

(From the London Times, Dec. 17.)

Yesterday evening Lord Sydney, (the Lord Chamberlain) issued his instructions for the funeral.

The custom which remained in force up to the burial of William IV., of interring members of the Royal family by torchlight has for many years been discontinued, and will not be resumed on this melancholy occasion. The funeral will take place on Monday next, the 23rd inst., and at about the same hour of the day as when the Duchess of Kent was buried, between 11 and 12 o'clock in the forenoon.

In accordance with the custom usually followed of late years, the funeral will not be a state one, nor will the remains of his Royal Highness lie in state. All these details, however, have been entrusted to Messrs. Banting, who have for so many years conducted the royal and public funerals in this country. But few and simple as are the rites which mark these solemn occasions, a great amount of preparation is necessary beforehand. St. George's chapel, Windsor, where the interment will take place, has to be draped and carpeted with black, the royal vault to be opened, and time allowed for the arrival of the representatives of foreign courts who will be deputed to attend on this occasion. All these arrangements have been carefully considered, and the shortest possible time in which they can be completed is by the date we have mentioned. At the funeral his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will act as chief mourner, supported by the Duke of Cambridge and by the Crown Prince of Prussia.

The remains will be laid in the royal vault. There are two vaults beneath St. George's chapel—the Glostster and the Bibal vault. The former was finally built to offer the interment of the Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, the last member of the branch of Hanover. The royal vault is kept apart exclusively for the coffins of the immediate members of the reigning family. Three coffins close the entrance to this final resting place of departed royalty, the boys of which are kept by the Sovereign, the Lord Chamberlain and the Dean of the Chapels Royal.—Amongst the the Queen, who was laid by the side of her royal husband, which vault has not been opened since the death of William IV., and the inscriptions which were put forth by some [illegible] to the place in which the coffin of the Duchess of Kent was subsequently deposited in this structure was apparently inadequate. The royal vault was never opened on that occasion at all, distance coffin only received by the workmen earlier descriptive till the vaulted arch at Frogmore was completed.

[illegible]

During yesterday the inner shell which [illegible] will enclose the remains of the Prince Consort were forwarded to Windsor. According to custom, the body will be interred in four coffins, the innermost of which being of [illegible] metal, could remain with him, then an outer, [illegible] very massive coffin of mahogany; over all comes the state coffin or case, of [illegible] and with massive silver gilt ornaments. On the leaden coffin will be [illegible] name, surmount with the style and titles of the deceased Prince. The mahogany coffin will simply bear a plate with his name and the date of his birth and death. On the state coffin will be the customary silver gilt plate bearing an inscription similar to that on the leaden coffin.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AND HIS FATHER'S DEATH

If anything could increase the respect which the bereaved family now command, it would be the devotion with which all its members have endeavored to aid and comfort the Queen in her affliction. We believe the Prince of Wales has not fallen short of his sister, the Princess Alice, in this respect, and that he has already taken his place by his mother's side as her stay and support in her distress. We have, indeed, as a people, every reason to hope that this good beginning may be followed by a career equally meritorious, and that, as the Queen has, within a few hours of his father's death, undertaken to associate him with her in the arduous work of the British Monarchy, the Prince may feel at the solemnity of his position, and fit himself to the part to which he is destined. It must be obvious that for the Prince of Wales the period of nonage is past. Though legally a minor until November, 1862, his Royal Highness is nearly as old as his father was at his marriage, and more than two years older than his mother was when she ascended the Throne. If we add to this that he has been specially educated to wear the British Crown to which he has been Heir Apparent from his birth, and that he has had opportunities of seeing the world which were denied to his parents, not to speak of their predecessors of the House of Hanover, the Prince ought now to show the faculties which will make a good King. It is, no doubt, a sudden change which has come upon him. But a few days ago he was a youth at the University, without a thought of public life, and now he finds himself on the steps of the Throne as its first friend and counsellor. From being restrained even beyond what is usual at his age by the care of a prudent father, he find himself to some extent the head of his family—at any rate, its oldest male representative, and in some sense the guide of his younger brothers and sisters. The destiny for one so young is, indeed, a great one, but it is at the same time weighted with the heaviest cares. To bear these cares the Prince must now make up his mind, if he wishes to gain the affection and esteem of the country. The national goodwill is not to be obtained without some sacrifices, and the Prince has before him, as in the fable, two paths—those of duty and pleasure. The next few months will decide whether he is to stand in popular estimation where his late father stood—whether in the King who is to rule over us we are to look for one who, like his parents, will take an interest in all that benefits his people, and will show ability and energy in the study of it, or one who will only receive the conventional respect which belongs to his rank and office. Exposed to many temptations, his Royal Highness must resolve to earn public applause by resisting all that will draw him from the side of a mother and a Queen who requires his help, and from the service of a nation which needs every counsellor it can find.

PREPARATIONS FOR WAR NOT TO BE STOPPED BY THE SURRENDER OF SLIDELL AND MASON.

(Cor. of the Manchester Guardian.)

London, Friday, Dec. 13.

In the present state of the public mind, when war or peace is little more than a matter of conjecture, upon which, as we are all equally informed, one man's opinion is as good as another's, every straw indicating the direction of the great issue is eagerly watched. To-day comes the telegram announcing that a proposal for an arbitration is about being made by King Leopold. In the minds of some this is associated with a rumor prevalent during the last week that the Queen regards the possible contest with extreme discomfort; so much so that she had the dispatch to Lord Lyons, as originally framed, modified into a more pacific form. The close friendship between Her Majesty and King Leopold seems to give a kind of connecting link between the telegram of to day and the rumor of the early part of the week. But I think it will turn out that as little attention ought to be paid to the one as to the other. In the first place, I do not think it likely that the Queen really made any modification in the dispatch; and, in the next place, no suggestion of an arbitration could have emanated with the sentiments of the Government.—They regard it as a clear and well defined case of a wrongful act done, which must be repaired by the restitution of the Confederate Envoys. No more is asked, and nothing less will be accepted. And, if my information be not erroneous, either Mason and Slidell, or Lord Lyons will be in Liverpool by the 29th or 30th of this month. The Government has asked for no apology. No importance is attached to any apology that could be made by the Federal Government, and the mere is reduced to the simplest possible proportions—the prompt surrender of the gentleman taken from the deck of the Trent.

The probabilities of war or peace, as I have said, are merely a matter of opinion; but I think those whose views of public affairs are most valuable, from their position and experience lean to war. It is argued that every day the Confederate Commissioners are detained lessens the likelihood of their being given up. The Seward Cabinet has had time to look into the affair, as it was their bounden duty to do; and, if they felt they were wrong, they should have at once signified to Lord Lyons their readiness to repair the error into which their servant had fallen. It is expected that, with Mr. Seward's views about England, it is hardly in human nature to suppose that he has not got a paragraph into the President's Message which will commit him to a course inconsistent with our demand. The incident of the Harvey Birch became known beyond the Atlantic just in time to revive the excitement which had begun to subside after the arrival of the San Jacinto. It is feared that all these things will turn the scale in favor of war.

When I say this result is feared, I am aware which is by no means applicable to a large number of our public men, who look beyond the affair of the moment. The expectation of an [illegible] that many of the day is not far distant when the Southern Confederacy must be recognized; and this consummation they look forward to bringing about [illegible], to which we must be prepared to submit for peace. It is with this view, and in the interest of our [illegible] to see the Federal Government not working out their own ruin by [illegible] to Canada without any reference to the reply of the American Cabinet. Mr. Horace Mann has not [illegible] landed at Liverpool and received a address that he would be well out. If we are to have a war with the North, in connection with the United States Government, there would be no more disadvantageous moment for the purpose. It would be a great deal sooner, and would [illegible] time of the Autumnal Fleet. The [illegible]

A BATTALION OF BRITISH GUARDS FOR CANADA.

From the London Post, December 13.

The route having arrived at the Sheet street Barracks, Windsor, early yesterday morning, for the immediate departure for town of two hundred rank and file of the First battalion of Scots Fusileer Guard, which have been doing garrison duty at Windsor Castle since October last, the men were in readiness as early as ten o'clock in the forenoon, when they marched through the town in high spirits to the Great Western station en route for Paddington, headed by the fine band playing "I'm off to Charleston early in the morning," and loudly cheered by the inhabitants. On arriving in town they were to join the second battalion of Scots Fusileer Guards, in order to make up their full compliment of 1,000 men who are to sail immediately for Canada.

LESSONS TO BE DRAWN FROM THE EVENTS OF THE PAST FEW WEEKS.

(From the Montreal Witness.)

1st. These events have demonstrated that Britain has lost none of her vigor, and that she is now as prompt and decisive in any just cause as she was in the days of Queen Elizabeth, Oliver Cromwell, or William Pitt. It was a sublime spectacle to see the whole nation rising up as one man to protect or avenge two individuals with whom she had no kind of sympathy, but who had been arrested under the protection of her flag.

2nd. They have demonstrated that the United States are not that embodiment of self-will and unreasonableness which they have been supposed to be in all international questions. It was believed that they would ask everything and grant nothing, and, to attain their ends, threaten and boast to the very uttermost; but notwithstanding a few feeble utterances of this kind on the part of the Wallandigtams, Hales, Storrs, and such like ill-balanced minds, it is found that the United States can be as prompt to accord redress when they are in the wrong, as to demand it when they are in the right. There will, therefore, we doubt not, hereafter be a better appreciation of American character, and more cordial feeling in Britain towards the States than heretofore.

3rd. They have demonstrated that Canada is loyal and courageous to the core, and that her population might in any emergency be relieved upon by Britain to rise up as one man to defend their homes and maintain the British connection.

ROYAL ARTILLERY FOR BRITISH AMERICA.

In addition to the two batteries of Royal Artillery of the fourth brigade—now enroute for Quebec—the entire tenth brigade of garrison Artillery, now consisting of eight batteries, stationed at Woolwich and Shoeburyness, has been placed under orders for immediate embarkation to Canada, Nova Scotia and the British possessions in North America. The first, second and third batteries of the brigade, commanded by Majors J. G. Boothby, T. S. P. Field, and Captain H. Hayman, are ordered to leave Woolwich on Friday morning by railway for Liverpool, to embark at that port. Two batteries of this division arrived at Woolwich this day from Shoeburyness, and in addition those in Harman, F. Galloway, and C. J. M. Prothero; the 8th battery, Major R. B. M'Crea, second Captain M. Tweedie, Lieutenants W. H. Noble, D. N. Taylor and T. S. Rothwell. This division will also include two additional batteries, to be formed from the depot brigade at head quarters. A strong detachment of the coast brigade of Royal Artillery, and two battalions of the Military Train Corps, will embark for the same destination as soon as possible. Three batteries of the artillery force will proceed to Halifax, N. S., and the point of disembarkation of other batteries will depend to a great extent upon the state of the St. Lawrence. The force will be amply provided with warm clothing, and the means of travelling over snow and ice.

THE AMERICAN STONE FLEET.

Many of our readers may now and then have noticed in our telegraph columns, a reference to the "rat-hole squadron" or Stone Fleet, and not thoroughly understood its meaning. For their information we may state that the fleet numbers forty-five old whale ships purchased at the eastern ports, and heavily loaded with large stones. There are many reasons why whale-ships were selected for the purpose. For sinking the vessels, a lead pipe, six inches in diameter, had been placed through the bottom of each vessel. This was plugged up at each end, and a faucet inserted in the middle. When this pipe is opened, it is supposed the ship will sink in half an hour; but as it may be necessary to expedite matters, two three-inch augers are supplied each vessel, so that the bottom may be honey-combed if necessary. Twenty vessels will be sunk in Charleston harbor, and the remainder off Savannah. When once resting on the bottom, the action of the tide will partially bury them in sand, and eventually form a bar across the harbor.—Pilot.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO!

New York, Jan. 2.

By a arrival to-day at this port we learn that the Spanish squadron took possession of San Juan de Ulloa, on the 16th of December. Vera Cruz was evacuated by the Mexican troops the next day. They retired without firing a gun.

Havanna letters say that Santa Anna and Miramon are both to go to Mexico.—General Paia was at Havana and was about to leave for Mexico with reinforcements.

We learn from the Havanna Diario that the Governor of Vera Cruz was willing to evacuate the city but demanded and received a requisition of twenty-four hours. Gen. Gazotte, on landing, issued a proclamation to the troops and another to the people, the former to the effect that the troops had come thither only to demand satisfaction for the failure of treaties and violence committed against their compatriots, and to obtain guarantees against similar outrages in future. The question satisfactorily of the army would be, after fulfilling the mission of the Queen, to return to its own country with the certainty of having merited the affections of the Mexicans.

Nearly 100 convicts of the latest pattern have been found in San Juan de Ulloa.

[illegible] Col. Baskerville resigned his position in the American army, and to make room for his step, is raising 2,000 men for the Queen of England under the British [illegible] named lately.

REFLECTIONS ON THE PAST AND PRESENT.

The year 1861, with all its joys, cares, and sorrows, has passed away, and is no far from our grasp as the years before the flood. The commencement of a new year is a fitting period to review the past, in order that we may the more profitably employ the future. And here it is well to note that Time, like a vast rapid river, bears us along towards the great Ocean of Eternity. It never stops, nor never will stop, but at the dictation of Him who created it, hence we should learn the importance of improving time as it flies, for time once lost never returns—the moment which is lost is lost forever. There is not a year that passes away but is marked by something in our personal history as well as in the history of nations and the world generally. The year 1861 will be memorable in witnessing the dissolution of the American Union. In but a little more than three quarters of a century, the world has witnessed the growth of a nation from thirteen feeble States, numbering some four million of inhabitants, to thirty-three States, with a population of nearly thirty millions, and increasing as well in all the elements of national prosperity. Embracing as it does in its territory the climes of the Temperate zone as well as those of the Tropics, and producing luxuriantly all the fruits of the earth, necessary for the existence and comfort of man. No other people possesses so large a tract of fertile land in so eatable a climate for the existence of the human race—capable as it undoubtedly is of maintaining a population manyfold more of its present inhabitants.—With all its prosperity and its future indications of greatness, a spirit of discord, long apparent, breaks forth among this very people, and at this moment about one-third of this nation appears to have established a confederacy of its own, having its President Senate, Congress, Army and Navy, and all the requisites of a nation, and the year just closed has witnessed the armies of the two sections of this great and heretofore prosperous nation meet in deadly strife, the one struggling for a separate existence, the other to put down the rebellion so called. The one section of the country claiming the right of separate sovereign States to secede when they choose, the other denying that right; and the old year goes out witnessing an army nearly a million of men in camp, or ready in short notice to meet the foe—over 600,000 men against 350,000—and although portions of their hosts have met and killed one another, as yet no battle worthy of the name has been fought. It is for the future to tell of the victories and defeats of this belligerent forces. It is now some eight months since, we may say, this civil war commenced, during which period a marked depression of trade has been observable in Canada, and we have felt that war though at a distance from us affects the channels of commerce, and has left its mark on both our imports and exports. In connection with this civil war the past few weeks have been marked with an intense excitement all over the country, arising from the feeling entertained both here and in England of a probable rupture between the Northern States and England, growing out of the Trent affair. Though we felt as one man in our determination to assist all in our power to vindicate the unsullied honor of our dear fatherland, yet the prospect of a war with so close a neighbor as we know would be most disastrous to us commercially and pecuniarily. And now when we see that cloud clearing away we feel to breathe more freely, and hope springs up indicting coming prosperity. We do not wish it to be understood that we were afraid to meet a foe, if he venture upon our soil, because we feel rejoiced that the prospect of a war passes away; nothing of the sort. We do not want to go to war, nor do we brag what we can do and will do, but if need arise we can do something, and we reiterate the challenge, "Let them come if they dare." The exploits of '73 and '12 can be repeated in '62.

The elections of 1861 are somewhat remarkable. Our future political prospects look forbidding. When the people properly feel the burdens now groaning upon them they will probably arouse themselves, meantime, they seem willing to bear them and are pleased with those imposing them.

During the year just closed our good town has been visited with three very destructive fires—the last particularly so. Several substantial structures on the ruins have already been erected, indicating our elasticity and ability, phœnix-like to rise from such conflagrations.

Death, the inexorable visitor, of the human family, has, during the year, made many visits among our friends and acquaintances, and many familiar faces, will be seen by us no more. And not only among the lowly has death been busy, but the great and noble have fallen under his stroke, and even in the circle of royalty has the fell destroyer entered, and cut down the husband of our beloved Queen. We cannot but drop a tear over departed worth, for a most worthy man was the Prince Consort; a consistent and practical philanthropist, always at work, and at the head of every project for the bettering the condition of the poor and working classes, an ardent promoter of commerce, for the advancement of the arts and sciences, a kind friend, a faithful and loving husband, and an affectionate father; and may the Divine hand dry the tears of the widow and the orphans.

We congratulate our readers upon the position of affairs generally, notwithstanding the alarm of war, and the loss and distress consequent upon the late news. Though competitors are being formed for every "arm of the service" as one of the many placards has it, though others are drilling and preparing for the work, yet we have plenty of good turkeys and geese to enjoy the festivities of the season, to say nothing of beef and mutton, and pork galore. We have been blest with bountiful crops. We have as much business as we could reasonably look for. The backwoods are alive with men, and no particular stagnation exists in any branch. Before the unhappy news of a national embroglio, the saw-mill owners were looking forward to a brisk summer business. American buyers were in town and were about closing with some parties on favorable terms, when the war news cut off negotiations. We may now reasonably look forward to a return of prosperity in the lumber business, and consequent prosperity in all other branches of trade. We therefore now make our bow and wish all our readers and patrons a happy new year, and trust that while they rejoice in view of what they have and expect, that they will remember the poor and stretch forth the hand to aid them, at the same time we hope that they will not be unmindful of the poor printer.

☞ The reflections on the old and new year were crowded out of last week's issue.

THE "DISLOYALY" SLANDER.

The Leader in a late number in an article headed "What we have gained by the Trent discussion," says: "One special advantage must occur from the spectacle to which we are adverting. The accusations of disloyalty that have been so often bandied about will not be so much heard in future and the rancorous feelings they occasioned will be permitted to rest." We are pleased to find this acknowledgment from such a quarter. There was not in Canada a more foul libeller of disloyalty than this very Leader, during the recent elections. The greater part of the government press continually charged the opposition with disloyalty, and the object appeared to be to make the elections turn upon this point. Some of the supporters of the government have stoutly affirmed that the elections did turn upon disloyalty. We always feel disposed to give credit to men who honestly hold political opinions even though they be in opposition to our own, but we make free to say that the men who have either by viva voce writing or the press, attempted to impugne the loyalty of the opponents to the present government, knew at the time that they were falsely accusing the men who they now acknowledge to be loyal. We have before given our views on this subject, and we feel confirmed that a more base and cowardly act has never transpired in the country, either by oppositionists or ministerialists than that wicked one uttered by John A. McDonald, taken up and reiterated by the Post Master General, Mr Conger and such worthies, and by the Leader and its confreres, that loyalty was confined to the Ministerial side of the House.

We trust those gentlemen in Peterboro' who acted so base will get their deserts. The papers have all "backed out" and they will have their reward. The people will learn that they cannot place confidence in such false, truculent accusers of innocent men. Such conduct merits the execration of every right-thinking man of whatever party he belongs to. Their present attitude and conduct bear on their front as if written in legible characters the odious epithet of false accusers.

ANTICIPATED COMPLICATIONS.

The news of the Trent difficulty being amicably and honorably settled spread joy and gladness all over Canada as well as the Northern States. In Wall Street the effects following Secretary Seward's answer to Lord Lyons was magic-like, stocks went up, confidence seemed restored, capitalists and bankers seemed to breathe more freely, and commerce all over the land revived. We feel assured that all sensible and reflecting men everywhere will rejoice that we are saved from the horrors of a war which at one time seemed so imminent, although, as our readers are aware, we never yielded our expectation of an amicable settlement of the Trent difficulty. Mr Seward in his lengthy reply to Lord Lyons has earned for himself the repute of being a clever man. It was said by some of his countrymen that he left a back door open by which he could escape with eclat. This he has admirably effected and his country is indebted to him for his astuteness in cating a leek so pompously.

We are, however, sorry to find that new "complications" are likely to arise out of the blockade of the Southern ports. Apart from the international view of the case it appears that the act of sinking the sixteen stone ships at the mouth of Charleston harbour is one that arouses the anger of England and France, showing, as they maintain it does, a malignity of feeling bordering on the demoniac. The Times says of it that "people who would do an act like this would pluck the sun out of the heavens to put their enemies in darkness, or dry up the rivers that no grass might for ever grow on the soil where they had been offended." As for ourselves we would deprecate any improper interference by other nations in American matters, and we should deplore any circumstance that may unfortunately lead to hostilities. We are for peace at all costs save national dishonor. At the same time we are afraid that the Northern government may commit themselves to the legitimate interference of neutral powers who are always jealous of international rights. We are aware that great allowances should at the present time be made for that pecuniarious. Civil discord is always more difficult to manage, than national broils, and it is no wonder if in the engagement of so difficult a task as suppressing the rebellion of one third of the nation, examples of a very grave character will be committed.

As to the sinking of the "stone fleet" we say nothing about the legal right of doing so, but the act carries with it something repugnant to our better natures, and we cannot feel astonishment at the strong language employed by the Times. That our people as well as the British people generally will act together, honorably, and justly, by deed and speech, towards our neighbours in the present struggle, Canada may rest assured, and may the Divine hand dry the tears of the widow and the orphans.

THE COUNCIL ELECTIONS.

Little or no interest was taken in the elections.

In the South Ward Messrs. E. Chamberlen, James Ryan, and George Hughes, were elected without opposition.

In the North Ward Messrs. W. Toole, H. Lawson, and C. Bradfield, went in by acclamation.

In the Centre Ward Messrs. W. Cumming, John Reid, John Maloney, Thomas White, jr., Thomas Eastlood, and James Stevenson, were nominated. Messrs. Stevenson and Eastlood were soon withdrawn, leaving the contest between the four first-named. The polling was continued till the afternoon when T. White, jr. having only 10 votes recorded in his favor, was withdrawn, and Messrs. Cumming, Reid and Maloney, were declared elected.

In the East Ward a number of candidates were brought out, but the contest was between Mr. Ormond and Mr. Robert Stevenson, which ended for the latter. The three elected were Messrs. Fry, Dickson, and Stevenson.

A WORTHY APPOINTMENT.

Mr. Wm. Arnott has been appointed Chief Constable of the Town for the unexpired term, in the place of Mr. Wm. Cumming, resigned. The new Council will probably appoint Mr. Arnott by by-law for this year.

FIRE.

The small frame building on Hunter St., occupied by Mr. Griffin, and Messrs Wm. Mercer & Bros., was destroyed by fire on Thursday night last. The wind was favorable, otherwise Mr. Bradburn's building and those adjoining would have also been consumed. It is almost a wonder how the store of Messrs. Lemay & Turcott escaped. As usual the cow-bell on the engine-house failed to awaken the inhabitants, and very few were out at the fire. We hope the new Council will do something toward putting the town in a better position in case of fire. It would be an easy matter for one of the Volunteer Companies to form themselves into a Fire Company also; in many towns it is so. Defence against fire is the prime duty of a volunteer.

Perhaps when the Battery guns arrive, one of them may be fired as a fire alarm. Something is needed.

☞ The examination into the loss of the North Briton on the Magen Islands has resulted in a recommendation of the Magistrate and Nautical Assessor to restore the certificate to Captain Grange, with a caution. The only point of blame was that on the Captain's going below at midnight having given orders to the Mate to sound and afterwards countermanded that order. It was supposed if that order had not been countermanded the vessel might have been saved.

☞ The weather has been very remarkable so far this season—very little cold and no snow. Up to noon on New Year's day it was mild, raining and thawing. The wind changed soon after and commenced blowing and freezing. Since then it has been rather severely cold, but, strange to say, up to the present time we have had little or no snow. It is a question if the "oldest inhabitant" ever saw so little snow in this locality as we have had this season.—Sleighing is out of the question, waggons and buggies are all the go—a novelty indeed for this latitude. We fear the fall wheat will suffer from the severe frosts.

THE FIELD BATTERY.

Our friend Col. Haultain is at work in earnest to raise a Battery of Artillery.—That he will succeed beyond his greatest expectations we have no doubt whatever.—Without the least disparagement of our other Volunteer Companies, we must say the Peterboro' Battery of Artillery will be a Company of which the Province may yet be proud. The extended experience of Col. H. as an artillery officer in the British Army, fits him peculiarly for commanding; and the men cannot but have the greatest confidence in their commander. As will be seen by advertisement a meeting will be held at the Town Hall, on Saturday at 2 o'clock, in connection with the formation of the Battery, when all information respecting it will be made known. We hope to see a large attendance, particularly from the neighboring Townships.

NEW PAPERS.

"The British Canadian" is the name of a decent-looking sheet to be published in Port Hope, the first number of which has reached us.

We see it stated that Mr W. S. Johnstone, formerly of the Cornwall Freeholder, is about to commence publishing the Port Hope Guide, for some time defunct.

MAD DOGS.

The present season is an unusual one for the prevalence of hydrophobia. In many places the entire canine race has been exterminated. The appearance of a mad dog in our streets on Tuesday, has awakened many to the danger of leaving dogs at large, unmuzzled. A number of dogs were bitten by the mad one, and they in their turn will in time go mad also. We think some steps should be taken to destroy all dogs showing symptoms of hydrophobia.

MALICIOUS.—Mr. R. D. Baskerville, hairdresser, was the subject of another malicious outrage, on the night of the 31st ult. an apple was thrown through one of the large panes of glass in his shop. The authorities should take some steps to protect a quiet, respectable resident from such outrages. This is the third time Mr Baskerville has suffered in the same way. He offers $50 reward for the discovery of the offenders in the three instances.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—I understand you in noticing my letter in last week's Examiner, you mean to say that the Sheriff has no control in the matter of the publication of his official notes. He is bound to give them to the government organ for insertion. If so all I can say is that it must be hard for a person to be to such a fix, and I regret that Mr. Hall has had to submit to so hard a tax upon his temper. I am well aware there are many subsidized papers in the country, and was aware that the Review was one, but could not understand how the Government had control of Sheriffs' advertisements. Nor can I yet understand it unless it be in the compact between the government and its officer. Query,—supposing there was no government organ in Peterborough and the papers in it were in opposition, would either get the Sheriff's advertisements? If so, which?

TITUS.

Peterboro', 6th January, 1862.

JOIN THE VOLUNTEERS.

We would strongly recommend each and all of our able-bodied fellow-citizens to join one or other of the Volunteer corps being formed. Even, if happily peace be preserved for the present, the inducements to volunteer are many. A regular system of drill is very beneficial, both physically and mentally. An erect carriage is obtained by drill; and the man who walks erect, his chest expanded, and his lungs obtaining free breathing scope, is always healthier than he who moves about street, bent as if by sickness or premature old age. A system of drill, too, is a sure cure for laziness; and he who pays attention to his drill will have no time for loafing.—And if, unfortunately, war should break out the benefit of joining these companies now will be found to be incalculable.

We hear of some of our merchants—aye, and men, too, who prate of their loyalty—saying, "Oh, we have no time to attend to these things." It may be that ere long they will wish that they had taken time. It is too late to prepare for danger when it is at your doors; and if, which is by no means impossible, an invasion of Canada should take place, and the property of men who have no time to drill should be destroyed, the verdict of their fellow-countrymen will be, "served them right." Many, again say, "We will not join just now, but if invasion does take place we will fight as well as the best of you." So said the Northerners, and they did fight—at Bull's Run. We tell these gentlemen who hang back that they will not fight as well as the volunteers. To fight well, an army must be well drilled and well disciplined, and militiamen without drill or discipline are an obstacle instead of assistance to regulars. Again we say to all, "Join the Volunteers."

MURDER AT HARWOOD.

(From the Cobourg Sentinel.)

It is with feelings of painful regret that we this week record a most lamentable case of murder, which was committed at Harwood, Rice Lake, on Monday evening last. It appears that a man by the name of Christopher Reynolds, a resident of that place, while in a state of intoxication on the evening above mentioned, was amusing his children by singing to them, whilst his wife, who was near her confinement, sat on a chair near by. His wife made some remark which displeased Reynolds, when he made a kick towards her, striking the chair on which she was sitting with such force as to knock it from under her, when she fell heavily on her side upon a foot stool, causing such serious injury that she expired in ten minutes afterwards. She never spoke a word after falling. Dr. Reid, Coroner of this town, proceeded to the premises of Reynolds on Wednesday last, and empanelled a jury. Several witnesses were examined, but the principal evidence was from Mary Reynolds, daughter of Christopher Reynolds, who being only 12 years of age, said she was unacquainted with the nature of an oath; her evidence was taken without the administration of the oath. She stated that "her mother, the deceased, was sitting in a chair about 10 o'clock on Monday evening, the 30th ult., she said something to my father which made him angry, when he put his foot against the chair and shoved it over, when mother fell off the chair, and over a stool, which was on the floor, with the legs up. When mother was on the chair, she seemed quite well, but as soon as she fell, she said 'God help her, that was her last.' Father said mother had been quarrelling all evening, but the last time he struck at or near her, and when he pushed the chair. When I first wanted to go out for assistance father wouldn't let me; but told me not to make a noise.—Father had been drinking during the evening, and I think he was tipsy." The jury returned the following verdict:

That the said Alice Reynolds did come to her death by injuries inflicted by the Christopher Reynolds, on the evening of the 30th of December last, and that the said Christ'r Reynolds, not having the fear of God before his eyes, did feloniously kill and slay Alice Reynolds, against the peace of our said Lady the Queen, her crown, and dignity.

THE RECIPROCITY TREATY.

"The sympathy for the Southern Confederacy, manifested in Canada and in the British provinces, will probably bring about the repeal of the Reciprocity Treaty, against which the agricultural interests of the country have [illegible] united [illegible] with [illegible]—or rather purchased. [illegible] facts concerning the manner in which the Treaty was ratified by Congress will be elicited [illegible] show the workings of the 'lobby, a dozen years since."

IS IT A MYSTERY?

On Friday afternoon last, while a fisherman named James Goodwin was in the marsh east of the Don river, and near Ashbridge's bay, he discovered lying in the mixture of mud and water of that locality a black hat, a coat and other articles of clothing, in the pockets of one of which was a silver watch and a small amount of money. Inside of the hat were the words "Wm. F. Stewart, 60 Camp street, New Orleans." Goodwin took the property to his residence on the Kingston road, where it now awaits a claimant. It is not known how it came into the marsh, and fears are entertained that the owner may have lost his life there. Search was made, but no trace whatever of a human body could be found. Is it possible that some dread mystery remains to be developed?—Leader.

DIED IN SHORT OF HOURS.—On Sunday it was discovered that a female, a steerage passenger by the screw-steamer Falcon, which arrived at the Broomielaw from Londonderry, had expired. Dr. Mills was sent for, and he is of opinion that death resulted from natural causes. From a letter which was found on the person of deceased,

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE "ETNA."

New York, Dec. 21.

The steamship Etna which left Liverpool at noon on the 12th and Queenstown on the 13th, arrived here at 8 a. m.

The steamers of the Canadian, New York and Philadelphia lines were stipulating with shippers for the right to call at any intermediate port, discharge cargo, &c., should it be deemed unsafe from war or otherwise to go to their ports of destination.

President Lincoln's message claimed great attention, notwithstanding that public feeling was deeply engrossed with the death of Prince Albert. The silence of the President's message on the Trent affair was the subject of much conjecture and comment. It was generally regarded as a loop hole for escape, and gave rise to some hope of peace, although the general construction was warlike.

The Times argues that by studied silence the President left himself at the door for retreat, but thinks the chances of peace are undoubtedly diminished.

The Times says nothing can be more ungracious than the President's treatment of foreign powers; for their forbearance, a gracious and courteous acknowledgment was due. The Times also devotes an article to the report of the Secretary of the Navy, which it treats with ridicule, and denounces as an unparalleled crime the project of blocking up ports by sunken vessels.

The Post treats the message as undoubtably warlike, and although remarking the silence in relation to the Trent affair says it was scarcely within the ordinary scope of a Message; it also charges the President with ingratitude in delaying with maratime powers. In the same article it says the despatch to Lord Lyons was simple and final, it is ultimatum in itself.

The Daily News considers that silence in the Trent affair is an indication of prudence and caution, favorable to peace. It is pleased to believe that President Lincoln desired to hold himself free, to speak at an appropriate time—it nevertheless complains of Mr. Lincoln's reticence, and the little credit he gives Foreign Governments.

The Star justifies silence relative to the Trent affair, and praises the clearness, force and ability of the Message.

The Herald takes a contrary view, and deems peace as almost hopeless. A vote of thanks to Captain Wilkes is regarded as an insult to England.

The Persia took out nearly 1,200 troops.

The Grenadiers and Scots Fusilier Guards would embark on the 19th.

All disposable vessels in the Mediterranean were assembled at Gibraltar, ready for immediate departure.

Admiral Dacres is appointed second in command to Admiral Milne.

Parliament meets in the middle of January.

The death of Prince Albert has caused a most profound sensation, and a great sympathy for the Queen, who has borne her bereavement with much fortitude. The warmest eulogiums have been passed towards the Prince, and a strong sympathy from the French and other continental Courts, many of which went immediately into mourning.

Lord Palmerston was ill from the gout, but is better.

Liverpool, Dec. 19.

London, Dec. 19.

It was current at Paris yesterday that the French government had sent a note to Russia, Prussia, and Austria, suggesting common mediation of the great powers between England and America.

The Herald's correspondence observes that a tender of such mediation would be a menace and it would rejected on that very ground.

Admiral Dacres will hoist his flag on the Edgar, as second in command of the North American station.

A portion of the Mediterranean fleet is gradually accumulating at Gibraltar, to be ready if necessary to cross the Atlantic.

Lord Elgin and Bishop Are leaving for British North America.

FURTHER BY THE ASIA.

Warlike preparations continued unabated.

Additional troops were ordered to be ready to embark, but the Army and Navy Gazette of the 21st says that no more are likely to be placed under orders until hostilities are actually declared.

The steamship Cleopotra would leave Liverpool on the 21st for Queenstown, there to embark over 500 men of the 17th regiment.

The Magdelna would embark about 1,000 men at Southampton on the 21st. The Parana with about 1,000 of the Scots Fusilier Guards left Southampton on the 20th for British North America. The mail steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, numbering about 50, were to be armed and made capable of resisting privateers in case of war. The gun boats in second class reserve at Portsmouth had been ordered to be fitted out immediately.

Halifax, Dec. 31.

The steamships Adriatic and Persia have arrived here with troops.

The Cleopatra and Parana are likely to be here to day.

Passengers by the Asia here report a rumor that the blocking up of Charleston harbor with stones, is likely to lead to difficulty with European powers.

It is further rumored that England's warlike preparations will continue in view thereof, and that the surrender of Mason and Slidell are not the whole of England's demand.

The Asia will sail at six p. m. for New York.

Papers between the Etna and Asia contained no real news.

The Paris correspondents generally say they believe that hostilities between England and America will not be arrested, and that opinion has become more general.

The admiralty had notified that instruction had been sent to protect the British shipping in the China and the Indian seas.

New York, Dec. 21.

The London Morning Post reports that the instructions to Lord Lyons combine such judiciousness and temperance of procedure, that the American most tender of his pride, will be unable to complain of England's course as menacing or haughty.

A telegram of the 20th inst., from Berne, Switzerland, contains the following important announcement:—

The Federal Council has received the circular addressed by the French Government to the European Powers, that the arrest of Mason and Slidell was contrary to principles which are regarded as essential to the security of neutral flags. The circular states that the French Government deemed it necessary to submit this opinion to the Cabinet at Washington, in order to determine it to make concessions which the French Government considered indispensable.

A large meeting of officers and masters in the mercantile marine had been held at London, and they had resolved to heartily cooperate with the Government whenever their services might be required.

The Shipping Gazette says, that whether merchantmen be armed or not, the Government must detail a number of the fastest and most efficient ships to watch American privateers.

Mr. Cobden, in a letter declining to attend a public meeting at Brighton, strongly advocates arbitration in the American dispute and says that the object of all national men and true patriots should be to enforce principles of mediation on the government on the terms of agreement made at the Paris Congress Mr. Cobden thinks that no question can be more within the scope of the Paris resolution than that pending one, and the true test of the disposition of the Americans people will be the expressed willingness on the part of England to resort if necessary to mediation should such a conciliatory step meet with no better response than a desire by America to insult and wrong England at the powers of Europe would forthwith be arranged on England's side. Mr. Cobden says that the cry for peace is hardly enough at the present moment; what is required is peace on principles of impartial arbitration.

The London Times editorially disputes the arguments of Mr. Cobden, and says that the course he advocates would by no means tend to the preservation of peace either in the present instance or for the future.

The Times says:—"We insist upon knowing clearly whether we are in a reign of war or peace. If the seizure of the prisoners Mason and Slidell was an act of war, and as such it must be encountered by war. If they disown it they must prove their sincerity by repairing it. It is impossible to negociate in the former case, and the latter has not yet arisen. There is therefore no room for arbitration."

The Daily News while asserting that England will be satified with nothing short of full satisfaction for her violated rights, says it would obviously be harsh, violent and unjust to deny he American government of all right of replying and positively to refuse to hear what she has to urge on the legal points at issue, should there be any difficulty at Washington, in at once meeting England's demand. A little frank intersourse and explanation between the two governments would in all probability remove it, and this would be by far the best, most dignified and honorable way of settling the dispute. Failing in this it is for America to propose arbitration, and England would not be justified in refusing such invitation. The article concludes by denouncing the tone, menace and insult adopted by some of the journals.

The Daily News, in another article, defends the North from the charge of the Times, that the war was brutalising the Northern States. It also justifies the projected blockade of Charleston and Savannah by the stone ships as a bona fide operation of warfare.

The London Herald bitterly criticises Mr. Steward's foreign correspondence, charging him with insolence, folly and wickedness, as wanton and mischievous as any that history records.

The Times has also an editorial on Mr. Seward's dispatches and treats them with ridicule. Mr. Seward assumes to instruct the dutch human race as to the origin of the rights and pretensions of the war in America, and has confident assurances as to the dimensions and duration of the war.

Movements were taking place between the government and the authorities of Liverpool looking to the defences of that port.

The Post's Paris correspondent says, that neither France nor Russia have taken any steps as mediators.

The Paris Patrie in commenting the five French panels at New York say, others are shortly to be sent there.

The Times that gives currency to a report that the French government had proposed to Russia, Austria and Prussia a common mediation of the Four Powers in the Anglo-American question. The report was generally discredited.

The London Herald says, the tenders of mediation in such a form would be a menace and would be rejected on that ground.

English funds on the 20th were firmer, and had advanced ¼ per cent, chiefly owing to large investments. Various peace rumors were also instrumental in causing the rise, but there was nothing reliable in them. The demand for money was still increasing.

The Queen and Royal family had been to Osborne, owing to the unsatisfactory state of the Queen's health. No further bulletins had been issued.

The Prince of Wales remained at Windsor until after his father's funeral.

It has been decided that Parliament is to assemble on Tuesday the 14th of January.

The rentes closed to-day firm, at 67.75 35c.

The Temps asserts that a dispatch had been recieved from Mr. Seward saying that the American government is ready to guarantee every facility to neutrals compatible with the rights of belligerents, and would give any satisfaction in case of the infraction of any rule that has been adopted. This dispatch was dated before the Trent affair, but it is considered as showing the peaceful inclinations of the American government.

Paris, Dec. 22.

The Senate has agreed to the Senators' consultum by 132 against 1 vote.

M. Fould maintained the correctness of his late report to the Emperor, and said that it caused a rise in the public funds, which would have continued but for the apprehension of war between England and America.

The useless ness of extraordinary credits is demonstrated by what is now happening in England. Without the transfer of extraordinary credits, large bodies of troops and formidable fleets could be dispatched, without parliamentary action.

Berlin, Dec. 22.

The Council of Ministers have determined to convoke the Chambers on the 14th of January. The rumors of a ministerial crisis are unfounded.

Turin, Dec. 22.

The budget has been approved by 232 against 39 votes. The financial statements of minister Vosige, produced a good impression. The deficit for 1861 is put down at 400,000. The latter by the alienating of the Neapolitan and Sicilian rentes and by a portion of the loan will be reduced to 259,000,000, which the Minister proposes to cover by several new taxes, which it is estimated will yield 29,000,000, and the balance can be covered by treasury bonds.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

THE HOUR OF HIS DESTINY.

(From the London Times, Dec. 17.)

Her Majesty herself, with her accustomed readiness and composure, appealed at once to her family to undertake the great charge that suddenly threw upon them. In that family there are two upon whom the eyes of all England will naturally be attracted at this juncture. The Prince of Wales is rapidly approaching the age when a man is held responsible, of every sort and description, and by the manner of years he should now be not unprepared to assist his mother as the Prince Consort when he was not that duty. He has been so educated as to bring him into contact with a large variety of men, of words, of peoples, and of manners. By a happy forethought he has visited the very nation that now threatens to escape from worse difficulties by a war with his own mother country. If the Prince of Wales is ever to be a wise and good sovereign, he will now be a wise and good son; and if he will ever feel any call to devote himself to his country as his parents have done, he will feel it now. This is the time for that self sacrifice on which the greatness of a nation, as well as the glory of a statesman, a soldier or a priest must be founded. This, indeed, is the occasion such as historians and dramatists have loved to describe in the lives of their favorite princes, when the Prince of Wales will have to make a solemn choice between a life of frivolity, perhaps of trouble and misery, and a reign of usefulness, to make his name blessed forever. He must resolve, if he would do; and renounce if he would win. It is an awful thing to say "Now or never;" but experience proves that they who reject the first solemn call are seldom more affected by any that come after. From all accounts the Princess Alice has shown herself fully equal to the occasion receiving her dying father's confidences and giving her mother timely comfort and aid. That the Queen should gather her family around her and address them at such a time, for such a purpose, itself proves her confidence in them. That all, and above all the Prince of Wales, may be deserving of that confidence, is now the prayer of this great country. We know not how much the destinies, not only of the British Empire, but of the whole human race, depend on the youthful prince of whom we have seen so much; yet seem to know so little. Like the rest of us, he has position, and honor, and power to win. He may be a true king, or a shadow of royalty; and by the laws of human nature and the testimony of experience the decision is to be made this very hour.

DRUNKARDS' LABOR.

The Grand Jury at Kingston have submitted an extraordinary recommendation to the Court of Assize, presided over by Judge Mackenzie, which is that a new Penitentiary be built at Marmora, under the name of Government Penitentiary Iron Works, to which all persons convicted of crime, such as riotin; and drunkenness and such like, should be sent and employed in the manufactory of castings and bar iron. Of course the law would have to be changed to suit the proposed system. The jury suggest that—

"All persons found drunk shall be liable to a fine of five dollars and costs, to be paid instantly on conviction, before any magistrate or, in default, to be imprisoned at hard labor in the Penitentiary Iron Works until paid; if the prisoners have no means of paying their fines, to work out their amount, say at fifteen pence per day, at the Iron Works for their discharge. To further the real cure of drunkenness and vice, for the third offence make the law one year imprisonment at the Penitentiary Iron Works; also that all hotels, taverns, saloons, &c., such as all places where intoxicating liquors are sold shall be compelled to have a sign printed in every barroom in Canada, with the law for drunkenness and the penalties for such offences—five dollars first offence, ten dollars second offence, third offence one year in the Penitentiary Iron Works, at hard labor."

AMONG the most important of modern discoveries, Dr. Dodd's Canadian Pain Destroyer has now been before the public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single instance of dissatisfaction, where the directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all delighted with its operation, and speak in the highest terms of its virtues and magical effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it thoroughly, and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon it being a sovereign remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, incuring the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the torturing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. Orders are coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the Country for further supplies, and such testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

The Canadian Pain Destroyer never fails to give immediate relief. All Medicine dealers keep it. Physicians order and use it; and no family will be without it after once trying it.—Price only 25 cents per bottle All orders should be addressed to Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, C. W.

Sold in Peterboro by Ormond & Gilmour, A. W. Kempt, Wm. Coulter; in Millbrook by Dr. Turner; in Lindsay by C. Britton; and by all Dealers in Medicines. 50

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

RHEUMATISM & NEURALGIA

has long been needed. After earnest and patient research, this has been triumphantly discovered. It is called

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING!

Watson's Neuralgia King reaches the source of the trouble, and banishes the disease from the system. Unlike the untold number of Liniments and Embrocations which merely stimulates the surface, are but temporary in their effects, and are, at best, of doubtful virtue, it STRIKES AT THE HEART OF the ailment, ARREST IT, KILLS IT, EXTERMINATES IT, and leaves no trace behind.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

also cures GOUT AND DYSPEPSIA, in all their forms. It is now giving relief to thousands who have been suffering form these diseases, and who have tried all other remedies in vain.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

has received the highest testimonials from the highest sources in regard to its wonderful efficacy. It operates with equal success in mild and chronic cases, never failing to work out a speedy and permanent cure.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

costs but one dollar a bottle, and less than a bottle often effects the end desired.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

is the only Specific and cure for Rheumatism and Neuralgia that has ever been discovered.

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers; is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old red Professor Croft had a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, easing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fail in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Common Iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPERintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

PETERBORO', July 29th, 1861.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods so highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE, we present you with a perfect likeness of Tecuco, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstructing humor is removed, the lodge of Wisdom flies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c, &c. This Anti Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and fresh, clearing and cleansing the vital organs.

Pleasant indeed, is it to us, that we are able to place within your reach a medicine like the "Mountain Herb Pills," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints;

GREAT FEMALE MEDICINE

Females who value health, should never be without these Pills. They purify the blood, remove obstructions of all kinds, relieve the ailments of all pregnant ladies, and bring the rich tints of health to the pale cheek.

☞ The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Pioneers, a tribe of foreigners in Mexico. See the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the many interesting account it contains of the "GREAT MEDICINE" of the Aztecs.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Pure Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, CHRONIC, PLAIN, OR NERVOUS HEADACHE, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many sickly disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

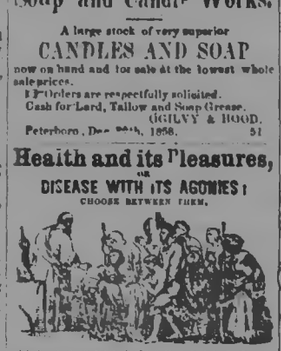
Health and its Pleasures, OR DISEASE WITH ITS AGONIES!

CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.



HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or for better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are on famous it is their purifying properties, especially the power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally admired as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances of trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be afflicted with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains seated in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills: they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

NOTHING TO DO.

Miss Molina McMoran was hearty and hale,
Yet wished to be slender, and languish, and pale,
So demanded her stomach of what was fit due,
And cheated her muscles of exercise, too.
She dipped in the goblet her fingers so rare,
And wiped their tip-ends with a delicate air,
Then clasped her white hands on her hoop-big spread lap,
Too lazy for conversse, and too vain for a nap;
For still 'twas her way in attracting the view,
To convince all beholders she'd nothing to do.

Miss Julia D. Scamper was agile and bright,
Her step like the Queen of the Fairies was light;
So her feet for the sloth of her hands made amends,
And she took for her calling to call on her friends,
At all times and all seasons she saluted their view,
Though they might be busy, she'd nothing to do,
But plenty of small talk around her to fling,
Hanging up a stale hour as she went from the door.
Alas! for such trophies, when time is no more.

Miss Celestia FitzMackerel would daudle all day,
Over crotchet and worsted, or novel and play;
She sorted her shades with an accurate eye,
But let her poor mother's wan features go by;
Who, worn half to death with her family care,
Found nothing like help from her daughter and heir.
"The getting of dinners, the toil and the stir
Of such vulgar pursuits were disgusting to her;
And thus to her nondescript creed she was true
The mother might fall, but she'd nothing to do.

O young man, my masters, who dream with delight,
Of a home of your own which no discord can blight,
Where are roses of Eden from fading exempt,
And an Eve which no contraband apple can tempt,
Where the wheels of good order like clock-work shall move,
And babies well-trained bring an ocean of love
Where prudence with smiles of endearment shall glow,
And wealth hand in hand with economy grow;
I'd fain sound a trumpet and bid you beware
Of quicksands beneath, though the surface seems fair;
Avoid, like the Upas, with poisonous dew,
Those exquisite ladies, who've nothing to do.

OLD MOSES;

OR THE PRAYING NEGRO.

Mr. B. was a great merchant in Baltimore. One morning as he was passing over the vessels that lay at the wharf, he stepped upon the deck of one, at the stern of which he saw a negro sitting, whose dejected countenance gave sure indication of distress.—He accosted him with—

"Hey, my man, what is the matter?"

The negro lifted up his eyes, and looking at Mr B., replied,

"Ah, massa, I'se in great trouble."

"What about?"

"Kase I'se fotched up here for to be sold."

"What for? what have you been doing? have you been stealing? or did you run away? or what?"

"No, no, Massa, none o' dat; its bekase I don't mind de scales."

"What kind of orders?"

"Well, massa stranger, I will tell you. Massa William werry struck man, and werry nice man, too, and shybody on de place got to mine him, and I break 'em de rule, but I didn't 'tend to break de rule doe; I forgot myself and got too high."

"It is for getting drunk, then, is it?"

"O no sah, not dat nudder."

"Then tell me what you are to be sold for."

"For prayin', sah."

"For praying, that is a strange tale.—Will not your master permit you to pray?"

"Oh yes, sah, he lets me pray easy, but I hollers too loud."

"And why do you holloo out in your prayers?"

"Kase de spirit comes on me, an I gets happy foce I knows it; den I goes; kant trole myself den, I knows nutting about massa's rule."

"And do you suppose your master will really sell you for that?"

"O yes, no help for me now; all de men in de world couldn't help me now; kase wen massa William says one ting he no do nudder."

"What is your name?"

"Moses, sah."

"What is your master's name?"

"Colonel William C."

"Where does he live?"

"Down on de easn shoah."

"Is he a good master, and treats you well?"

"O yes, no better massa in de world."

"Stand up and let me look at you." And Moses stood up and presented a robust frame, and as Mr. B. stripped up his sleeve his arm gave evidence of unusual muscular strength.

"Where is your master?"

"Yander he is, jis comin to de wharf."

As Mr B. started for the shore he heard Moses give a very heavy sigh, followed by a deep groan. Moses was not at all pleased with the present phase of affairs. He was strongly impressed with the idea that Mr. B. was a trader and intended to buy him, and it was this that made him so unwilling to communicate to Mr B. the desired information. Mr B. reached the wharf just as Colonel C. did. He introduced himself, and said,

"I understand that you want to sell that negro man yonder on board of the schooner."

Col. C. replied that he did.

"What do you ask for him?"

"I cannot [illegible] dollars."

"How old do you reckon him to be?"

"Somewhere about thirty."

"Is he healthy?"

"Yes, he never had any sickness in his life, except one or two spells of the [illegible]."

"Is he hearty?"

"Yes, sah; he will eat as much as any [illegible], and will work all day long as well."

[illegible] place. He is steady, honest and industrious. He has been my foreman for the last two years, and a more trusty negro I never knew."

"Why do you wish to sell him?"

"Because he disobeyed my orders. As I said he is my foreman; and that he might be available at any moment I might want him, I built his hut within a hundred yards of my own house, and I have never rung the bell at any time in the night or morning that his horn did not answer in five minutes after. But two years ago he got religion, and commenced what he terms family prayer—that is prayer in his hut every night and morning; and when he began his prayer it was impossible to tell when he would stop, especially if (as he termed it) he got happy. There he would sing and pray and holloo for an hour or two together, that you might hear him nearly a mile off. And he would pray for me and my wife and my children, and our whole family connections, to the third generation; and sometimes when we would have visitors, Moses' prayers would interrupt the conversation, and destroy the enjoyment of the whole company. The women would cry, and the children would cry, and it would get me almost frantic; and even after I had retired, it would sometimes be near daylight before I could get to sleep for it appeared to me that I could hear Moses pray for three hours after he had finished. I bore as long as I could, and then forbade his praying any more, and Moses promised obedience, but he soon transgressed; and my rule is never to whip, but when a negro proves incorrigible I sell him. This keeps them in better subjection, and is less trouble than whipping. And I pardoned Moses twice for disobedience in praying so loud, but the third time I knew I must sell him, or every negro on the farm would soon be perfectly regardless of all my orders."

"You spoke of Moses' but; I suppose from that he has a family."

"Yes, he has a woman and three children, or "wife" I suppose he calls her now, for soon after he got religion he asked me if they might be married, and I presume they were."

"What will you take for her and the children?"

"If you want them for your own use I will take seven hundred dollars; but I shall not sell Moses nor them to go out of the State."

"I wish them all for my own use, and will give you the fourteen hundred dollars."

Mr B. and Colonel C. then went to B.'s store, drew up the writings and closed the sale. After which they returned to the vessel. Mr. B. approached the negro, who sat with his eyes fixed upon the deck, wrapt in meditation of the most awful forbodings and said, "Well Moses; I have bought you."

Moses made a very low bow, and every muscle of his face worked with emotions as he replied, "Is you massa? Where's I gwine, massa; is I gwine to Georgy?"

"No," said Mr. B., "I am a merchant here in the city; yonder is my store, and I have purchased your wife and children, too, that you may not be separated."

"Bress God for dat! And massa kin I go to meetin' sometimes?"

"Yes, Moses, you can go to church three times on the Sabbath and every night in the week, and you can pray as often as you choose, and as loud as you choose, and as long as you choose; and every time you pray whether it be at home or in the church, I want you to pray for me, my wife, and all my children; for if you are a good man, your prayers will do us no harm, and we need them very much; and if you wish to you may pray for everybody of my name in the State. It will not injure them."

While Mr B. was dealing out these privileges to Moses, the negro's eyes danced in their sockets, and his full heart laughed outright for gladness, exposing two rows of even, clean ivories as any African can boast, and his heart's response was, "Bress God, bress God all de time, and bress you, too, massa; Moses nober tink 'bout he gwine to have all dese commodations; he makes me tink 'bout Joseph in de Egypt." And after Moses had poured a few blessings upon Col. C. [illegible] to him [illegible] and requested him to give his love and farewell to his mistress, the children, and all the servants, he followed Mr B. to the store, to enter upon the functions of his new office.

The return of the schooner brought to Moses his wife and children.

Early the next spring, as Mr B. was one day standing at the store door, he saw a man leap upon the wharf from the deck of a vessel, and walk hurriedly toward the store. He soon recognized him as Colonel C. They exchanged salutations, and to the Col.'s inquiry after Moses, Mr B. replied that he was up there measuring grain, and invited him to walk up and see him. Soon Mr B.'s attention was arrested by a [illegible] voice above. He listened and heard an unusual shuffling of feet, some one sobbing violently, and some one talking very hurriedly; and he determined to go up and see what was going on. When he reached the head of the stairs, he was startled by seeing Moses in the middle of the floor, down upon one knee, with his arms around the Colonel's waist, and talking rapidly, while the Colonel stood weeping. So soon as the Colonel could sufficiently control his feelings, he told Mr B. that he had never been able to free himself from the influence of Moses' prayers, and that, during the past year, he and his wife and all his children had been converted to God.

Moses responded, "Bress God, massa B., I do s'pose I may go hab Trebar forgit you in my prayers; I allers put de ole middle [illegible] de new one. Bress God, de debbil Makes dat 'bout Joseph in de Egypt."

The Colonel then visited to Mr. B. that his object in coming to Baltimore was to [illegible] and his family back again. But Mr. B. told him that it was out of the question, for he could not part with him; and he intended to emancipate Moses and his family. [illegible] Moses [illegible] Mr. B. THE WAR.

(From the N. Y. Independent.)

Our advices from Port Royal are to the 3d instant, and the news is good. On New Year's day an action took place at Port Royal Ferry, ten miles across the Island from Beaufort. As this place the rebels intrenched themselves after their defeat at Hilton Head, and the pickets of the two armies were in sight of each other—ours on the Island and the rebel on the mainland, Port Royal Ferry or Brick-yard Creek, about two hundred yards wide, flowing between them. On the 31st the gun-boats Seneca and Ellen started up Broad River, and the Pembina and Ottawa up Port Royal River, to cover the movement of troops designed to attack the rebels at the Ferry. Gen. Stevens's brigade, consisting of the Roundhead Regiment, Col. Leasure; the 8th Michigan, Col. Fenton; the 50th Pennsylvania, Col. Crist, and the 79th New York, Major Morrison commanding, were already at Beaufort, about ten miles by land from the Ferry; the 47th New York, Col. Frazier, and the 48th New York, Col. Perry, were ordered up from Hilton Head, and the entire force placed under Gen. Stevens's orders. These troops crossed the creek early on New Year's morning and advanced upon the principal rebel battery, supported by the gun-boats, which shelled the rebel position. On the way a skirmish occurred, but Gen. Stevens pressed on and took possession of the rebel batteries, after a short resistance. Gen. Stevens then followed to within six miles of the Charleston Railroad. A flag of truce was sent by the rebels, with a request to procure and bury the dead, which was granted, one hour being allotted for that purpose; but when the messenger returned to the flag with the reply, the flag and its bearers were missing; nothing more was heard from them, so of course Gen. Stevens's message never reached the enemy. The rebels had decamped, leaving behind them one large gun, which they had spiked. The rebel force was estimated at from 10,000 to 12,000 men, under the command of Gen. Pope, and their loss is not known. The forces of the Union troops were 4,500, the loss on the Union side being 8 wounded. Major Watson of the 8th Michigan was mortally wounded, and one private has since died. Gen. Stevens now holds possession of the mainland, and awaits re-enforcements from the North to proceed. Two batteries were demolished, and complete possession of Broad River is in our hands. Four or five rebel bodies were buried by our men, and one or two of their wounded were made prisoners. The Vanderbilt, which brought this news, brought 3,697 bales of cotton, consigned to the United States Quartermaster. Much excitement was created during the week by certain false reports. First, that there had been a great battle at Paducah, Ky., and a serious reverse for the Union. This was hardly exposed, when it was said that Gen. McClellan was near death's door, and could not possibly recover. This having been promptly contradicted, the sensationmakers started a rumor that a high officer in the army had been suspected of treason, and was under arrest. There was no truth in any of the stories, except that Gen. McClellan was for a time quite ill. He is now well enough to attend to his ordinary duties.

The little news that we have from the West is good. In Missouri there have been no important movements, nor has anything been heard of the redoubtable Price and his army of marauders. From Kentucky we learn that there is a prospect of a general engagement near or at Bowling Green, unless the rebels run away. Gen. Buell has a very strong force, and his men are in good trim and anxious to get at Buckner's army.

Southern papers give most discouraging pictures of the condition of the great rebel experiment. The torch of the incendiary is passing from city to city like an avenging sword. At Richmond the theater and some other buildings have been destroyed. At Nashville a number of valuable stores and a large quantity of public property shared the same fate. The Richmond Examiner of the 2d inst. tells us that "the year which yesterday began has opened with a check at Dranesville and a rumored disaster in Missouri; the year which yesterday began has opened with evil tidings," (the surrender of Messrs. Mason and Slidell.) The chagrin of the rebels at the action of the North in avoiding a war with England, knows no limit, although they endeavor to conceal it in frothy tirades about the national disgrace of the Union. Their hope of an alliance with Great Britain has ceased, and with that hope goes also that of recognition by any other nation. In their army, too, there appears to be an element of weakness of the most fatal character. By their own confession there is much drunkenness among the officers, and vacant idling by the men; regimental drills have fallen into complete disuse, and the Richmond Examiner says: We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the army is becoming a name of terror and dread to the minds of our citizens. Large sums are paid for "substitutes" by the better class of men; in one instance $2,500; Richmond is full of idle vagabonds discharged from the hospitals, and their dread of returning to the ranks is so great that one is said to have committed suicide rather than return to that life of famine, dirt and filthiness.

We learn from rebel sources that our forces at Ship Island have taken possession of Biloxi, on the mainland, commanding the railroad between Mobile and New Orleans, and had threatened to make still further seizures. They also say that something more has been done by Fort Pickens in the bombarding line, but what damage was done they have neglected to tell us.

From Fortress Monroe we learn that Big Bethel has been occupied by our troops without loss, the enemy having abandoned the place and fled to Yorktown. A scouting party, 800 strong, left Camp Hamilton on the 3rd, under Brigadier-General Max Weber. Six miles this side of Big Bethel our cavalry met the mounted pickets and drove them in. Upon arriving at the village it was found deserted, although there was ample evidence that three or four thousand troops had occupied the place but recently. Breast-works, half a mile in extent, pierced for 12 guns, were found, but the artillery had been removed.

The great expedition, under command of Gen. Burnside, is doubtless ready for sea, but the greatest secrecy is kept as to its time of sailing and its destination. The rebels are in great excitement concerning it, as they believe it to be intended for invading York and Rappahannock Rivers in the rear of their army, while McClellan makes an attack on their front.

The Cincinnati papers send us news that on Saturday there was a sharp and successful attack of Union troops on rebels at Hawkinsville, in Western Virginia. The Union troops consisted of about 700 infantry, and 40 cavalry; the enemy had 400 cavalry and 200 infantry. After a fight of an hour the rebels retired, leaving their tents, &c., encamped, 20 men. Great amounts of camp stores were obtained. There was no loss on the part of the Union troops.

There was a skirmish four days ago about a heavy battle on the upper Potomac, near Hancock, but it was an exaggeration. The rebels under General Jackson advanced to the river and threw over a few shells, but the effect was unimportant, except that it gave General Banks' Third brigade a march of thirty miles in the snow.

On Tuesday, in consequence of reports that the enemy were concentrating at Dauseville, General McClellan ordered a reconnoissance in force by 22,000 men, with two days' rations. A march of five miles proved that no considerable force of rebels was in the neighborhood.

Mr. WATKIN'S REPORT ON THE GRAND TRUNK.

(From the Globe.)

Notwithstanding the explicit assertions of members of the ministry at public meetings and of the journals in their interest, that not another sixpence would be given from the public purse in aid of the Grand Trunk, the startling fact is brought to light in Mr. Watkins' report, that not only has the Canadian Government pledged itself to consider the demand of the Grand Trunk for an issue of $7,500,000 debentures as the capitalization of an increased postal subsidy for the next twenty-five or thirty years but have, in fact, consented to the appointment of three arbitrators who are to have unlimited powers committed to them to determine, from this day to the year 1890, what shall be paid to the Grand Trunk by the people of Canada.

Some five months ago we alleged that a scheme of this nature was on foot, but it was indignantly denied by the Ministerial press as a groundless concoction of our own. The Leader of the 2nd August said: "The proposal to seek further assistance from the Provincial treasury is not one which any ministry or any party is likely to approve. Upon no subject has the country spoken more unequivocally than this.—Moderate and Ultra, the members in fact, are pledged to resist further advances. * * * * Not alone in our constituency are these views put forward, but in a large majority, if not in all the Constituencies of Upper Canada. True, some legislation may be requisite. But the only tolerable legislation will be that which will serve to assist parties concerned in the work of reorganization as their own plans may undertake. The idea of carrying them over their difficulty by the further application of public money or credit cannot be entertained; and we are satisfied that from the Moderate side of the House no expectation from any other result has been held out to them. * * * * The Province has done all that can be reasonably solicited at its hands in the way of financial relief, and we believe no more will be—we are sure that none ought to be proposed."

And yet this very scheme so denounced by the Ministerial organ is that which has received the approval of our government. We know we shall be told that the Government has not approved of the demand, that the appointment of arbitrators only has been agreed to. But, what need is there for this appointment? How is it that all the experience of the Post Office Department has become suddenly valueless? But the other day, the country had dinned into its ears the most fulsome laudations of the Postmaster General and all his officials.—Why is it that the experience, the sound judgment, the marvellous acuteness of these gentlemen have become utterly worthless? And even if confidence has been lost in Mr Sydney Smith and his "understrappers," was there not an appeal to the Executive Council? Is it possible that that illustrious body, with Mr. George Etienne Cartier at their head—after commissioners had been specially appointed to lay before them every sort of information on the subject—were not able to decide what was a just compensation for carrying the mails of the Grand Trunk Railway Company? Nay, even if Her Majesty's Ministers were incompetent to the task; how came it that the next appeal, that to the representatives of the people in Parliament assembled, was not resorted to? What peculiar knowledge and talent, what peculiar gift for deciding this knotty question were concentrated in the person of Mr. George Moffatt of Montreal, and Mr. J. W. Brooks, of Boston, that they of all men should be selected to decide this point, for which the postal department, the Executive Council, and the Parliament of Canada were deemed utterly incapable?

The fact is, the whole thing is but another of those miserable devices of the Government by which they seek to evade the direct responsibility of measures, which for their own ends they have determined to carry out. It will be interesting to see whether the new Parliament will submit to this most insulting scheme of Mr. Cartier's. This very proposition has been again and again under discussion before Parliament, and the popular views upon it well ascertained. It was therefore the height of audacity in the Ministry of the day to take steps which do not admit of effectual remedy, and which may be the means of coercing the representatives of the people into most unpalatable measures.

We observe, too, that Mr. Watkins thoroughly advocates another attack upon the pockets of the people of Canada for the construction of a road through the snow-drifts of Riviere du Loup. One hundred thousand dollars for all time, he is of opinion, Canadians should thankfully contribute for the building of this road! It is clear we have before us stirring times on the opening of Parliament

AMERICAN SYMPATHY WITH QUEEN VICTORIA.

It is pleasing, in these days of international hatreds and rejoicing over each other's misfortunes, to see the universal expression of sorrow and condolence in the American press on the death of Prince Albert. Since the event was announced a fortnight ago, we have read articles on the subject in upwards a hundred journals from every part of the country—from every Northern State this side of the Rocky Mountains—and the voice in every case has been the same: that of eulogy upon the deceased Prince, and sympathetic sorrow with the British people for their loss. This, of course, is only what might have been expected; yet it is none the less pleasing. The news came here when the feelings of the people were wrought up to the highest pitch by the Trent case, and when the London press was pouring upon the bleeding national wounds phials of the most rancorous insult. The London Times, in a malignant and Satanic article concerning the affairs of this country, published in its issue of the 12th ult., said: "Englishmen do not ask from American courtesy and affection; respect for our Queen, or regard for our Prince." Three days after the words were printed, the Prince died, and the Queen was a widow. And the next mail from America carried over to England the heart-felt condolences of twenty millions of a kindred people! Perhaps the Times was offended, but the sympathy was what the less kindly given.—Scottish Australian Herald.

WHO ARE THE LOYAL MEN.

(From the Ayr Observer)

Our readers will remember that, during the late electoral contest in this riding, the ever-recurring theme of our friend "Jacob" was the disloyalty of the Clear Grits—their "looking to Washington," &c. He boasted of his own loyalty, and that of the friends, and led every body to expect that if occasion should arise, the "Moderates" and "Conservatives" of Waterloo would rush as one man to uphold the authority of our gracious Sovereign, while the "Clear Grits" would all be "looking to Washington." Well, the occasion has risen, and we see the result.

There is not a more thoroughly "Clear Grit" locality in the County of Waterloo than Ayr, as Jacob very well knows to his cost; there is no more thoroughly "Moderate" and "Conservative" locality in the same County than Preston, as Jacob also very well knows: Galt occupies a position between. Now, if Jacob's doctrine be true we might expect Preston to be supereminently loyal; Galt somewhat lukewarm; and Ayr the focus of rebellion and "looking to Washington." Perhaps Jacob may say that this would be the result in the piping times of peace, but that he did not take probabilities of war into his august consideration, and it might be a little different. Well, if so, we are disposed for once to agree with our friend. When all is smooth sailing; when no cloud obscures the political horizon; and the ship of state moves majestically forward, we know that Jacob and his friends claim a monopoly of the loyalty of Waterloo. But when a storm arises—when the gale blows our good ship straight "to Washington," oh then! Jacob and his friends are not quite so forward or uproarious in their loyalty. Perhaps they are afraid some body might be hurt! Any way, they allow the "Clear Grits" to furnish the larger number of men to prevent our going "to Washington." During the past week, several battalions of our County Militia were mustered to give Volunteers an opportunity to join the company of 75 men required from each battalion. The two companies which met at Ayr, furnished twenty nine men, the names of whom we publish to day, the seven companies which met at Preston furnished 5 men! a beggarly five! to prevent our "going to Washington!" O Jacob O! Jacob! where were you? Where were the Moderate Conservatives of Preston and Hespler? Was not the very idea of these distinguished localities furnishing only five! men to prevent our "going to Washington" enough to deprive you of sleep? Rouse yourself, man! Give over jobbing about Registry Offices for a little, and try and raise among your friends a respectable force to prevent our "going to Washington."

We are not, by any means, impugning the loyalty of Jacob and his friends; they have a great deal of it, and are only bottling it up for future use. By the time the next election contest takes place, they expect to have a supply large enough to carry them triumphantly through it. Or perhaps, when the armies from Washington begin to rob the hen roosts, and sour krout barrels of Jacob and his friends, it will burst forth with such violence as to drive these ruthless invaders back "to Washington."

But Galt! Galt! what shall we say to Galt? It is rather too bad entirely, that seven companies should only furnish 8 men. Does the near neighborhood of Jacob and his friends injuriously effect the good men and true, of Galt? Are they also bottling their loyalty for future use? If Galt cannot furnish volunteers enough to fill the company required, let those who have offered themselves retire, and Ayr—little Ayr—that Clear Grits hole Ayr, will furnish the 75 men without any trouble.

OUR RELATIONS WITH ENGLAND.

There are some points in this matter which do not seem to have attracted the attention they deserve, and which it would be well for the American people to reflect over. First: The London Daily News has been our steady friend for a generation past. It is a paper which supports the rights of the people, and which approximates more nearly to American ideas of Government than, perhaps, any other influential journal out of the United States. Since the commencement of this war, it has uniformly sided with us and against the rebels. And yet, immediately on the arrival of the news of the Trent affair, it took sides more strongly against us than the Times. This clearly proves that the recent affair is not so much of a pretext as we have been taught to believe, but that many right-minded and friendly Englishmen sincerely believe that we wantonly insulted them.—Whether we were in the right or not, it must be a subject of regret that we should unnecessarily alienate friends anywhere, especially at a moment when friends are more than usually valuable. Second: If we regard the course of England respecting our offer to do away with privateering as having been altogether selfish (as it undoubtedly was), still that very fact absolutely demonstrates that England had no concealed intention to make war upon us; on the contrary, she could not even have anticipated the contingency of a war with us, otherwise she would have eagerly accepted the offer. Even in the passion which raged upon the first receipt of the news the Times could not forbear to refer to the suffering caused to England by our privateering, a suffering still vividly recollected after the lapse of very nearly half a century. Evidently, therefore, much as England may have relished the prospect of a division of the United States, she has hitherto had no intention of aiding actively and directly in bringing it about. It is something new for England to find herself a neutral, and to be summarily treated by a belligerent, something new and unpleasant, and rendered more so by the manner in which the story was told. The falsehoods of some of the New York journals in relation to Mr. Seward's pretended schemes on Canada created an unfriendly feeling which served as a ground-work for the Trent news to act upon, and a juncture has been brought about which will require the utmost good sense on the part of our Administration to handle.—Philadelphia Ledger.

DESERTION OF AN ENGLISH OFFICER.

The extraordinary fact of the desertion of an English officer from his colours is noticed in the Gazette of this week though the fact itself had been known for a considerable time past. Lieutenant Death, of the Royal Artillery, one of the professors of Sandhurst, partly on account of embarrassed circumstances, and partly unable to resist the temptation of what he considered a better opening, has gone over to America, without leave or notice, and now it is said holds the position of a major in the Confederate army. He is well known to be a man of some talent, and was the first of those gentlemen who joined the Artillery, without passing through the Academy, during the Russian war. Captain Carrie, on the staff at Aldershot, who also went long before him to Australia with the Federals.—English Paper.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 16TH, 1862

PETERBOROUGH VOLUNTEER FIELD BATTERY.

According to previous announcement, a meeting was held in the Town Hall, on Saturday last, at 2 p. m.

Sheriff Hall was called to the Chair, and John Hickey, Esq., was appointed Secretary.

Col. Haultain addressed the audience in a forcible and instructive speech of nearly an hour's duration. We will publish it in substance next week. At the close of the speech the list was opened for Volunteers, when thirty-seven names were immediately signed. (A number have since been added.)

Mr. Hickey, at the request of Col. H., exhibited an Artillery uniform, which attracted much attention, and was praised by all who saw it.

We are convinced that a most powerful Company will be formed, one which will not only be a credit to this locality, but to the Province, as we have already expressed it.

There is a difficulty in the way, but one which we hope will be easily surmounted,—it is in raising the requisite number of horses. 45 is the number wanted; 15 have already been pledged; 30 more are needed to make up the complement.—Situated as we are in the midst of a vast Agricultural country, ten times the number of horses wanted should be forthcoming without a second call. We feel sure that many of the young Farmers of the neighboring Townships have only to be reminded of their duty, to come forward themselves, pledging a horse each in the service. The horse will only be required on special occasions, and then the work will be light. It is no great task for four horses to draw a 6-pounder gun and half-a-dozen men.

It would be an easy matter for Smith, Otonabee, and Monaghan, to furnish ten men and ten horses each. Colonel Haultain thinks it might be arranged to place a gun in each of any three Townships where a sufficient number of men were raised to justify separate drill, the whole battery only coming together on general muster and parade days.

FIELD BATTERY NOTICE.

We would remind the members of the Artillery Company, of the meeting to be held in the Town Hall, on Saturday next, at 2 p. m. Important business, such as the choosing of officers, &c., will probably come before the meeting.

"INDEPENDENT SENTIMENTS."

A very startling announcement was made in the Leader a short time ago, to the effect that that journal does not give the views of the Provincial Government upon American matters, but simply its own independent sentiments. This statement was made in consequence of the repeated habit of the American press identifying the views expressed by that journal upon American politics with the supposed sentiments of the Canadian Government. "So frequently," says the Leader, "have we observed instances of this of late that it becomes necessary to put the matter right. Once for all we wish it to be distinctly understood that the 'Leader' gives utterance to its own independent sentiments." This extraordinary bulletin appeared on the 8th instant. Two days before that in commenting rather lengthily upon a grave charge preferred by the New York Times against that journal for its incendiarism, it sees fit then to pass over the statement made by the Times, "that it (the Leader) is the recognized organ of the Provincial Government." Not only will the American press be taken aback by such an acknowledgment, but the entire press in Canada as well. On the important question of American policy appearing in the Leader, we are instructed henceforth to consider them as not the views of the Government, but only those of the Leader. If this be true, then the Canadian Government has no organ in Upper Canada. All we can say is that we have always regarded the opinions put forth by that journal as those of the Government. If "independent sentiments" can be announced on one subject, why not on another? And if, for purposes best known to itself, the Leader chooses to deny now what it never has before to our knowledge, that it is the Government organ, the press in Canada at least will not acknowledge the fraud. It is a subsidised Government paper. It does not express sentiments contrary to the views of the Government. It cannot afford to be an independent journal; there are too large stakes at issue to kick up its heels, and run counter to John A. & Co. Will a journal in the Province believe that the Government holds opinions contrary to those ventilated in the Leader on American matters? We are always in the habit of considering everything the organ says with the Government, and when charging the Government with views enunciated by its organ. Well, pray, did that organ turn round and say, "O, we give not the opinions of the Government, but our own independent sentiments!" Never! It is the first time we ever knew of its disowning its status, and we simply receive its statement as such. With all its ability and influence it has brought its party South and almost the North to its views, its share in carrying out Yankee bluster anything but friendly to the North, and we do not wonder at the notice taken by the American press of such a power of discord amongst us, especially as it is the universally acknowledged organ of our Government. One feeling on matters that real friends of our country, and that is to preserve if possible friendly relations towards our Northern neighbors. The parties, we care not who they may, that heedlessly or maliciously provoke ill-feeling are its enemies, and we are sorry to have to class that "able" and "influential" paper, the Leader, in the latter category. But we hope, now that "Jeff. Davis" agent has gone South or elsewhere, we may henceforth look for a better state of feeling from that journal.

THE WAR FEELING SOUTH OF '45.

In troublous times such as we are now passing through, it is instructive to mark the political views of men as they find utterance through the press. One striking peculiarity, and one claiming the serious attention of the student of mankind, is that in giving expression to the passing events the leaders and utterers of public opinion at the present time seem to give that opinion as it really is. There is no desire nor temptation to conceal or play the hypocrite, and thus the real animus floats to the surface. In corroboration of this statement we have only to read the American papers, and from the highest to the lowest we find, since the Trent difficulty, an almost universal expression of bad feeling towards England and Canada for the part they have severally taken in their intestine broils.—England's neutrality has been denounced as a sham, and Canada has been traduced for the sympathy shown with England in the dishonour done to its flag. This sympathy is said to be only feigned; our real cause for joining with England is stated by the N. York World to be hatred to the Americans. England is put down as an enemy, actuated by principles of envy towards a powerful rival, and every act put forth by that power, and every utterance by the press is said to be actuated by a spirit of ill will towards the Northern States. Neutrality as thus interpreted, means sympathy for them and hatred towards the South. England failing in manifesting this is consequently insincere in her pretences of neutrality.—Horace Greeley, one of the ablest writers of the press, and who has generally been friendly towards England, has recently given expression to his views of friendship as follows:

"Congress must be prompt. Whatever is done must be done quickly. It is plain that the Union must be saved soon or never. If any have doubted that the rebels have something more than the good will of European haters of Freedom and Progress, they can doubt no longer. The ostentatious and reiterated protestations of neutrality which reach us from over the water do not deceive even the utterers. Hereditary Aristocracy yearns towards Hereditary Slavery, and plans its rescue from impending ruin. If one pretext for interference will not serve, another will be trumped up. In all Europe this Republic has no powerful and hearty friend but the illustrious emancipator of Twenty Millions of serfs." * *

"Now America should remember that when the Crimean war was raging a large portion of the press expressed sympathy with Russia, and dislike—to use no harsher word—towards England. It is but natural for that sympathy to be reciprocated in the hour of need. England felt keenly at the time when these expressions were given, and she has during the great rebellion given no reason to assert that she has sought retaliation. It is, however, extremely galling to be goaded by jibes and innuendoes, such as have teemed from the American press for months past, in every nook of the North. From the blaster and noise so oft reiterated one is led to believe that if the Northern States were but able, they would not hesitate long to fight with that country from which they sprang.

☞ The N. Y. Independent in its issue on the 2nd January, has the following PEACH ITEMS FOR GEN. MCCLELLAN:

The way to improve Government finances—Fight.

The way to gain the respect of England and France,—Fight.

The way to increase our army to a million of men,—Fight.

The way to entertain rebels, pirates and traitors,—Fight.

The way to sustain the Government and show we are in earnest,—Fight.

The way and the only way to have peace,—Fight.

The way to do justice and promote freedom,—Fight.

The way to have Bible faith is to have works. Therefore,—FIGHT!

No one will doubt for a moment that the author of the above is a genuine son of Mars, and a worthy descendent of Cromwell's grand army. We opine it is from the pen of the Rev. Editor, Henry Ward Beecher.

THE NEW MAP.

Messrs. Cosin, Bonsey & Co.'s agent is delivering their new Map of Canada West. It is all, and more than, we expected it would be. Beside the usual township and county dividing lines, macadamized roads, postal routes, &c., which are, by the way, all beautifully and distinctly colored, there are the last Census returns, and a view of the Parliamentary buildings at Ottawa.—In the south-east corner of the map there is a Map of the Township of Smith, in this County, and also plans of the cities of Kingston and Toronto. The price is only $4.50; and orders may be left for the Map, at this office, or at the Bookstore of T. Mension.

THE HOGAN MURDER CASE.

On Friday last, James Brown was again tried for the murder of Mr. Hogan. It will be remembered that Brown was tried and convicted early last spring, but owing to the exertions of his lawyer a new trial was granted, on the ground of some important evidence in the prisoner's favour not having been addduced. The new trial concluded, as before, in his conviction. The jury were out but about one hour, and the unfortunate man is sentenced to be hung on the 10th of March next.

NEWSPAPER PUFFING.

A dispute has arisen between the Leader and the Globe as to the extent of circulation enjoyed by each. The latter has taken objection to the statement going the rounds that the Leader has the largest circulation of any paper in the Province, and claiming that prerogative for itself. This declaration has elicited from the Leader a contradiction, and an offer of certain "forfeitures," if certain points are not thus and so, on condition, however, that the Globe shall forfeit equal sums if certain conditions are not so, and are so. The offers are so singular, and (to us) so unexplicable, that we make room for them. They are four in number, and the Globe is to accept all or none. The Patriot is to count with the Leader, and the writer is certain that Mr. Brown will not accept of the terms here proposed. A less sapient wight than the proposer of such a mess of conflicting offers might be sure that no sane man would accept of them. Why not if certain of the superiority of numbers over that of the Globe state the number and challenge scrutiny as to correct returns? Why this circuituous route to test its strength? Simply we should suppose because it would rather have a doubt exist than the truth. The extraordinary zeal for charity put forward is a mere flourish of trumpets. Here are its offers, and if any of our readers will send us solutions to Nos. 3 and 4 we shall be obliged:—

1st. We will forfeit $10,000, to be applied to charitable purposes, if, on examination by disinterested parties, our circulation be found to be not over the figure at which the Globe states it—10,000; on condition that Mr. Brown forfeit an equal sum, for the same purposes, if his journal has not, in adopting the pretence of the Montreal Witness, stated our circulation below the truth.

2nd. We will forfeit $20,000 if our circulation be less than 20,000, or twice the figure at which the Globe has placed it; on condition that Mr. Brown forfeit $20,000, if our circulation be more than 20,000.—The forfeits in all cases to go for charitable purposes.

3rd. We will forfeit $5,000, if our subscription list do not contain as many names as that of the Globe; on condition that Mr. Brown will forfeit an equal sum, if his subscription list contain more than ours.

4th. We will forfeit $1,000 if our subscription list does not outnumber that of the Globe by 5,000 names; on condition that Mr. Brown forfeits an equal sum, if the difference in numbers in our favor be less than this.

The Leader wants its readers to believe that the puffing is all on the Globe's side than which nothing can be further from the truth. It has heretofore done a good business in that line, and the "forfeit" flourish above beats the Globe hollow.

"Oh wad some Spirit the giftie gie us,
To see oursels as ithers see us".

THE BAPTIST MISSIONARY CONVENTION, OF C. W.

The Annual Missionary Meeting of the Baptist Church in this Town, in connection with the above, was held in their Chapel, on Friday evening last. Considering the unpropitious state of the weather the attendance was respectable. The speeches were good, and appropriate to the occasion. It appears that a good many devoted men are sustained by that Convention, or Society, in different parts of our Province, especially in the Backwoods, and new settlements. Encouraging successes have crowned their labours during the past year. One of the speakers referred to what that denomination, of which the above Convention is only a part, have been doing in other parts of the world. One fact was stated, which is a matter of rejoicing to every one who sincerely desires to see the advancement of Messiah's Kingdom in the world,—namely, that the membership of that Denomination on this Continent amounts to upwards of one million and one hundred thousand. We heartily wish success to every branch of the Christian Church.

The Chair was ably filled by Col. Haultain, M. P. P. In his opening address he made some very appropriate remarks on Missions. Would that our Parliament were composed of such men,—then we might soon expect to see an improvement in the government of our country.

☞ We regret that Rev. Mr. Ormiston, of Hamilton, in consequence of family affliction, cannot comply with the request of the Peterboro Temperance Reformation Society, to deliver a lecture on Temperance in this place, at present.

SNOW.—The long-waited-for snow has come at last, and all travelers is rejoiced over it. We look for a revival of trade with the country, if a thaw does not set in. There are about 10 inches of snow on the ground, and while we write

"Silently, silently, soft and low, Falls to the earth the virgin snow."

WHAT THE "LOUISVILLE JOURNAL" SAYS:

"We do not believe that even in this age of cheap publications any work can be more remarkable than the terms of the Scientific American at $2 per annum, with twenty-five per cent discount for clubs of ten. It forms a yearly volume of 832 pages quarto, with an immense number of original engravings of patented machines, valuable inventions, and objects of scientific interest.—There is not an industrial pursuit which does not receive a share of its attention. It contains official lists of patent claims, important intelligence, practical receipts for useful domestic purposes, and has long stood both in this country and Europe, as the highest authority in the mechanic arts and sciences. There is no publication more valuable to the farmer, the miller, the mechanic, the engineer, the iron founder, or the manufacturer. We have never opened a number without learning something we never knew before, and obtaining valuable information for the benefit of our readers. The Publishers, Messrs. Munn & Co., of 37 Park Row, New York, have deserved the success which they have achieved. No one should visit that city without calling at their palatial establishment, which is a museum of inventive genius, collected from the entire world. If any of our readers away off in the country do not know this work, and will take our advice, they will mail $2 and become subscribers immediately, or be sure to confirm the truth of our recommendation."

We fully endorse the above, and would recommend our readers to take Prentice's advice, and subscribe for the paper. A new volume commenced on the first of January, and it being a valuable work of reference, containing, as it does, the only official list of claims published in the States, every number should be preserved. The paper is published every Saturday, by the well-known patent agents, Messrs. Munn & Co., who have conducted the paper during the past sixteen years.

In addition to furnishing specimen copies of the paper gratis, the publishers will send a pamphlet of advice to inventors, free of charge.

VOLUNTEER RIFLES No. 2.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—Would you please publish in your next issue, the enclosed preamble and resolutions, as the expression of a meeting held by Rifle Company No. 2, now organized in this town, in the matter of the Review on "Volunteer Companies." By so doing you will greatly oblige.

(Signed.)
THOS. GREENE, Secretary. JOHN WATTERSON, Chairman.

Whereas, articles have appeared in the two last issues of the Review, relative to the formation, and condemnatory of the policy of organizing a plurality of Volunteer Companies, and in which the editor instances the existence of "one Rifle Company numbering fifty-four men, together with a troop of Cavalry lately organized, and the effort now being made by Col. Haultain to form an artillery company; and then denies the possibility of sustaining, "in times of calmness," any more than those three companies in a town like Peterborough, because, forsooth, of the "host of little incidental expenses, which only those who have attempted to maintain Volunteer Companies can understand." And Whereas, in those articles he not only thus covertly aims a blow at the efforts which have been made during the past four weeks to organize another Rifle Company, but even impugns our motives as a body and sneers at the loyalty of those whom we have recommended as officers, by asserting that "the desire to obtain commissions is the principal, if not the only ground for its formation," and that the gentlemen whose loyalty is such that they can only fight as officers ought not to be permitted to interfere with the efficiency and permanent success of the active force of the country." Therefore, be it

Resolved,—That we regard this attempt of the Review to injure our standing and prevent our recognition as a company by the Government as splenetic, and altogether beneath its pretensions as a public journal, —that we look upon this attack as being prompted by the jealousy of a few individual members of Rifle Company No. 1, who exhibit towards us the feelings of "the dog in the manger." They have been unable to obtain their complement of men, notwithstanding that their company has been in existence for five years, and now after great effort and splendid inducements held out to "respectable young men," only number some fifty four members, and are therefore unwilling that another should flourish beside them.

Resolved,—That the very fact of our attempting to organize a Rifle Company, with the prospect of being called into almost immediate service is sufficient evidence as to our motives; and as to the loyalty of those we have recommended as officers, we are confident that though they may not allow it to ooze out of their finger ends, they will, should they ever have an opportunity, give satisfactory proof of not only that, but of their courage in the hour of danger.

That in reference to the exalted opinion the Review evidently entertains of us, as men who can be led and wheedled into recommending those very persons whose only object is to obtain commissions, we desire to express our deep obligations, but feel bound to say that we do not consider ourselves affected by it in the least.

Resolved,—That we are of opinion that the organization and recognition of this company will in no wise interfere with the efficiency and permanent success of that one already in existence, since it is neither popular with us as individuals, nor yet with the inhabitants of Peterborough, as is abundantly evident from its past history and present standing.

For the Examiner.

A LAWFUL GOVERNMENT.

MR. EDITOR,—In a Canadian paper I see the following extract taken from the minutes of a Presbytery in the South, viz: "Any established Government becomes by the fact of its existence 'an ordinance of God,' and its executive officers 'God's ministers.'" (The italics are mine.)

This doctrine, Mr. Editor, is not sound. The mere fact of its existence does not make or prove a Government to be the ordinance of God. It is its moral character, as founded in principles of justice, and organized and administered for the good of mankind, that marks it as God's ordinance of civil government. [See Rom. xiii. 1, 1st Peter ii. 13; Scottish Conf. of Faith, chapters xx., xxiii., and xxxi.]

The government of the United States is the ordinance of God: not because it exists, but because of its moral character; and every true American as well as every British one contemplated by England's noble patriotic lords will pray every day that this Government of the Union will prove itself, "not a terror to good works, but to the evil," and show that the civil ruler is "the minister of God to revenge to destroy strath upon him that doeth evil."

But, were a band of pirates to seize a territory, and establish a government to plunder other people, and murder and enslave them, their established government would not become by the fact of its existence "an ordinance of God," and its executive "God's ministers." Their government would be an ordinance of the devil and its officers ministers of the devil, doing his foul works. We must distinguish. So Algernon Sydney wrote: "He that professes to the veneration and obedience due "to the ministers of God, must, by his actions, manifest that he is so. And though "I am unwilling to advance a proposition "that may sound harshly to tender ears, I "am inclined to believe, that the same rule "which obliges us to yield obedience to the "good magistrate, who in the minister of "God, and assures us that in obeying him "we obey God, does equally oblige us not "to obey those who make themselves the "ministers of the devil, lest in obeying the "we obey the devil, whose works they do. * * * * * The apostle commanding "our obedience to the ministers of God for "our good, commands us not to be obedient to the ministers of the devil to our "hurt: for we can't serve two masters" [Sydney's discourses on Government, vol. iii., Edinburgh edition, 1837.] This, Mr. Editor, is the teaching of the Scriptures, and of common sense.

The Government of the Southern Confederacy based avowedly on slavery, as its foundation and chief corner stone, consecrating the overthrow of Constitutional Government, and the destruction of liberty, and living by perjury, treason, rebellion, robbery and murder—ex vi termini is a fact; but it is an ordinance of the devil. And it will she did be established for 500 years and succeed in stealing and killing even more extensively than it has yet been able to do, it would not become by the fact of its existence "an ordinance of God," and its executive officers "God's ministers." When any government becomes a Usurpation, cruel and despotic, depriving its subjects of their rights, or compelling them upon wrong-doing, subverting the very ends of government among men, it ceases to be God's moral ordinance, and loses all claim to conscientious obedience.

The slavish doctrine of passive obedience Mr. Editor, to civil power because it happens in the permissive providence of God to exist is wide spread and permeates more or less distinctly or thoroughly the minds of many. It is neither rational nor christian, and ought to be rooted out of the earth. That the Southern Confederacy is an execrable tyranny who will doubt it except those whose moral perceptions are blunted by the love of gain.

AWFUL DEATH.

A MAN ROASTED ALIVE.

On Thursday morning last one of the most horrible occurrences we have ever put on record took place on the farm of Mr. S. J. Crooker, in West Flamboro', near Millgrove. It appears that a man named John Enwright, a laborer who lived in a shanty on Mr. Crooker's farm, came home on Thursday quite drunk, and after quarrelling with his wife and family, turned them all out of the shanty. The family, we understand, went into the bush, and after being there some time their attention was called to the shanty by seeing it on flames. The eldest girl reached it first, and opening the door she called to her father who answered, when she rushed in and pulled him out by the arm, he having been lying on a bed. When taken out it was found that every stitch of clothes that he had on was consumed, his body being literally roasted from his head to his feet. He lived for about four hours, suffering the most excruciating pain. We were told by parties who saw the body that it presented a horrible appearance, every part of it being burnt to a crisp. Dr. Skinner, of Waterdown, held an inquest on the remains, when the facts above stated were elicited, and a verdict rendered accordingly. The deceased leaves a wife and a large family. And thus is added another to the long list of victims which that most accursed of agents in the hands of the devil, has brought to a horrible death, and a more horrible eternity.—Dundas Banner.

HOW PRINCE LEOPOLD RECEIVED THE

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE "CANADA."

Halifax, January 8.

The steamship Canada, with European dates of the 29th Dec. has arrived.

She has on board 300 troops.

A great state of suspense prevailed in England when the Canada left, pending the arrival of the Africa with the response of the American Government.

Liverpool breadstuffs easier. Provisions steady. Consols 90¼ to 90⅞.

The steamship Hibernian, which sails for Portland on the 2nd of January, takes nearly 700 troops to St. Johns, N. B.

The steamship Africa which sails from Liverpool on the 8th also takes a body of troops to Halifax.

The ship Ascension, from New York for the Clyde, was abandoned at sea on the 10th of December.

Lord Palmerston has recovered from his gout.

The Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha had returned to the continent.

The Prussian Government has sent a note to Washington, condemning the taking of Messrs Mason and Slidell.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Deputations from religious denominations, including Congregational Union, Baptist Union, and the Baptist board, had an interview on the 27th Dec. with Earl Russell, on the subject of the threatened war with America.

The English papers continue to teem with articles on the American question, but they are mostly confined to speculations on its solution. It is not essential to give them.

As the nearest precedent yet quoted on the Trent case, the London Times draws attention to the affair of the Dutch Brig Hendrick and Alida, captured by the British in 1777, while she was bound to a neutral port. She had on board five officers for the American army. The ships and officers were released to the British Admiralty.—The Judge ruling that although the officers frankly admitted their positions, yet as they were passengers on a neutral ship which sailed from one neutral port for another neutral port, the proximate destination of the passengers was entitled to be regarded as an innocent destination and they were consequently set at liberty. The Times claims that this case plainly establishes the principles that between one neutral port and another, all persons and things whatever may be legally carried.

The London Daily News in a letter from Hamburg gives an account of a meeting of English merchants there, at which Mr Ward, British Charge de Affairs, read a paper purporting to be Earl Russell's note to Lord Lyons in regard to the Trent affair. This note is worded with moderation. It describes the seizure of Mason and Slidell, the Southern Commissioners, in the terms of Capt. William's report to the admiralty. It makes no mention of the opinion of the law officers of the crown of which so much has been said in the papers, but simply and explicitly characterizes the capture of the commissioners as an infraction on the law of nations, and an insult to the English flag. It declares the cabinet at St. James, considering the cordial and friendly character of the relations existing between England and the United States, cannot doubt for an instant that the Captain of the San Jacinto must have acted without authority from the government. It then adds that the British Government feels confident that the Government of the United States will not hesitate to take the only step possible under the circumstances; namely:—Release the prisoners, and make at the same time suitable reparation for the insult offered to the British flag. Every regiment in camp at Aldershot had been medically inspected, so that they might be in perfect readiness to embark immediately for Canada.

A body of trained nurses, on Florence Nightingale's plan, was to proceed at once to Halifax.

The Army and Navy Gazette says that there is a prospect of trouble with the Sikhs.

The batteries of artillery at Bombay, on point of embarkation to England, were stopped by pressing telegrams from Bengal.

The English funds were flat on the 27th December, and ½ to ¾ lower. The heaviness was caused by the tone of the New York journals, per City of Baltimore, which it was argued, rendered the prospects of peace less favorable.

In a letter, written by the command of the Queen, it is stated that the only consolation she could hope to find in the rest of her life, under her sad and hopeless bereavement, is to endeavor to carry out the wishes and intentions of her beloved husband.

FRANCE.

The Moniteur announces the appointment of two Vice-Admirals, three Rear Admirals, 10 Captains, and 40 Lieutenants of men-of-war, and 16 Captains of frigates.

It was reported that Prussia had made fresh proposals to France in relation to the conclusion of the treaty of commerce between France and the Zollverein.

The Paris bourse was flat on the 27th of Dec. at 67f 25c for rentes.

ITALY.

There was vague rumors that an attempt had been made to assassinate Gen. Geisen at Rome, and that one of his aids had received two poignard wounds.

It was reported that the French Ambassador to Rome had proposed to the ex-King of Naples to take up his residence in France.

Gen. Klappa had arrived in Turin.

It is reported that Signor Petinga, Lieut. Governor of Sicily, had tendered his resignation.

AUSTRIA.

It is rumored that a considerable reduction of the Austrian army was contemplated.

PORTUGAL.

Prince Jose continued in a very dangerous state.

The King had gone to his country palace at the request of the people. This was urged upon him in consequence of some disturbances which afterwards ensued.

A Royal decree appoints a medical commission to examine into the state of the Royal Palace.

DEATH OF TOWN-MAJOR MCDONALD.—About 5 o'clock on Thursday morning, Colin McDonald, Town-Major of Montreal, closed a long career of service to his country, by death. For some months past his failing health gave warning to his friends to anticipate his departure at an early period. Previously attached to his profession, he continued almost up to the hour of his decease to discharge its duties; and last Sunday week, upon the occasion of the revival of the troops at Point St. Charles, he contracted such further injury to his feet during health as finally to lay him on his bed of death. The surgery of the garrison returns, one of the best of the heroes of Waterloo, will long remain fresh in the heart of the people, among those to be found.—Witness.

REV. NEWMAN HALL ON WAR WITH AMERICA.

At an assembly of 30,000 persons, chiefly working men, held on Monday evening, in Surrey Chapel, London, the Rev. Newman Hall, in referring to the subject of America, said:—

"At the lecture before the Young Men's Association, at Exeter-Hall, last Tuesday, I was informed that 'Rule Britannia' was performed on the organ, and rapturously applauded ("So it was"). If the audience simply meant to express feelings of patriotism I should heartily have concurred with them. No doubt it was so. But some people think that Britannia has a right to rule the waves—that the ocean is her freehold—that she may do what she pleases there—and that other nations must not be allowed to act in a manner which is quite justifiable as ourselves. Need I say that such a sentiment is most unjust and monstrous (hear). If this were carried out, we should always be at war with every commercial nation of the world. No, there are certain laws and customs to regulate affairs on the sea. By these we must abide as much as others; and therefore the first thing that is to be done is to discover what is the law, whether it has been broken, and what can be done to secure its observance in future. Let us then regard this question as one needing calmness of judgment, not violence and passion. Let the case be deliberately argued. If America meant not defiance but law, let us first ascertain what the law is—not demanding our interpretation as the true one, nor admitting theirs—but referring the dispute to an impartial referee (cheers, and a voice: "That's good"). But it may be urged in apology for violent measures—" Must we not at once vindicate the honour of our flag?" What! is our flag of so recent an invention, with so poor a history, enriched with so few memories of glory, that it will be dishonoured by a short and dignified delay? Dishonoured by not at once fluttering defiance at the freemen of the North; but would it not be more dishonoured by floating side by side with the flag of slave-traders—(repeated cheers)—slave-breeders, slave-drivers. If there must be one or other dishonoured, oh, spare us this latter! Never, never let the meteor flag of Britain be hoisted on the side of tyranny and oppression (great cheering). Suppose you were watching two men fighting, and one of them, all excited and irritable, chose to be provoked by your looks, and shake his fist in your face between the rounds (laughter and cheers). Would it be brave in you at once to fight him? No! Bravery would say, "Wait a bit, my fine fellow—you have enough in your hands at present. I'm too much of a man to accept your challenge just now. Finish affairs with your antagonist first—two at once isn't fair. You may think better of it perhaps by and by." Now, I ask you, would not that be braver than at once accepting such a man's defiance? (cheers). But, supposing arbitration fails, and we cannot agree on this question, must we then fight? I have been astonished at the opinion widely circulated that we must either have redress or retaliation. Is there not a third alternative—forgiveness? (Hear, hear.) If for the future the law can be made plain, and obedience to it secured, may we not pass over the affront to ourselves? Is every dispute between nations, if not amicably arranged, to end in war? Is nothing to be overlooked? What is the law of Christ? "Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another. If any man have a quarrel against any, even as God forgave you, so also do ye." We feel it our duty to act on this law in our individual capacity. Is it less our duty as citizens and as nations? I fear I have detained you too long, but the importance of the subject I trust will be a sufficient apology. (Cheers, and "Go on.") Once more, working men, do what you can to allay the unreasonable, unchristian war spirit that now prevails. Ponder on what I have said, and, in opposition to much that you hear and read, let my arguments, if you deem them valid, persuade you to do your utmost for the preservation of peace.

I am not one of those who condemn war under all circumstances—but I consider in this case war would be most wicked. I am not one of those who advocate peace at any price—but I do earnestly plead for peace now, and I ask you all to help. Let each do what he can to roll back the tide of angry passion. Oh, by all the untold horrors of angry war—by the tenfold terribleness of a war between brothers—by the sufferings of a negro race, who look on with alarm lest you should join the oppressors to rivet their chains—by the aspiration of the long down-trodden people of Hungary and Italy, whose enemies will exult if the great champions of freedom contend with each other instead of making common cause against tyranny—by the interests of the world, which will look on aghast to see its civilizers and evangelists engaged in mortal combat, instead of prosecuting in holy rivalry enterprises of benevolence—by the principles of Christianity—by the example of Jesus—by the law of God—I beseech you east in your influence on the side of peace, and loudly proclaim, "We will have no war with America." (Loud and repeated applause.

NARROW ESCAPE OF A RAILWAY TRAIN.

The day express train from Toronto to London, on Friday last, had a very narrow escape from being upset, and all the passengers being either killed or seriously injured. Between four and five miles east of St. Mary's two of the rails on the south side of the track became broken, and it is thought that the severe frost, together with the passage of heavy freight trains over the road, was the cause. One of the rails was broken almost in the centre and was thrown a considerable distance into the ditch, while about eight inches of the second one had given way and lay detached on the track, thus making a fearful breakage over which no train could pass. One of the section men, who was passing over the road, discovered the accident, and at once sent forward a man to St. Mary's to inform the agent, and he then started along the track to stop the progress of the express train from the east. This man used every exertion to gain the notice of the engine-driver, but failed, and it was not until the train had passed him more than half a mile that the news agent, who chanced to be standing at the end door of the last car, saw him waving his handkerchief, and notified the conductor, who stopped the train a short distance from the breakage. The broken parts of the rails were temporarily laid down and the trains passed over in safety. A handsome sum of money was collected in the cars and presented to the man who gave the alarm.—Advertiser.

—A young girl in Paris lately took a dislike to her boarding school, and coming home at vacation, refused to return. Her parents placed her under strict surveillance, as they feared she meant to commit suicide, but she managed to get a pair of scissors, and so far succeeded in cutting her tongue out that her power of speech is despaired of by the surgeons in attendance.

THE RECIPROCITY TREATY.

The New York World says the Reciprocity Treaty with Canada must be abrogated as soon as possible, at all events as soon as the time limited expires—about two years hence. The reasons assigned is the alleged hostile feeling exhibited by Canada towards the United States. The object of the United States, in agreeing to the treaty, was, it asserts, to draw closer together the commercial and social relations of the two countries,—but that the effect has been to allay the desire of annexation, previously manifested, and that now Canada is even more bitter and hostile than England. It is but too true that the administration papers in Canada have evinced a strange antipathy to the Northern States in their struggle to put down the slavery rebellion. They have not only predicted, but apparently exulted in the anticipation of the Southern States. It is therefore not strange that we hear of threats to terminate the Reciprocity Treaty, and if the threat is carried into effect, we shall undoubtedly owe it to the efforts of such papers as the Toronto Leader, Montreal Commercial Advertiser, and Quebec Chronicle, to stir up ill-blood towards the Northern States. But the World is mistaken in supposing that the great body of the people in Canada sympathise with the views enunciated by those papers. We might as well hold the people of the United States responsible for the hostility manifested by such papers as the New York Herald towards Canada. We believe the truth is that a vast majority on both sides of the line 45 feel friendly towards each other, and would really deprecate a war or the interruption of amicable relations with each other.—Sherbrooke Gazette.

POVERTY OF PARIS.—The most terrible feature of the present condition of things in the poverty. Since 1848, nothing has been seen like it. If you take long walks in Paris now, you will most likely be several times accosted by decently dressed people of both sexes, but principally by elderly ladies, actually begging! I have with my own eyes seen this phenomenon perpetually within the last three weeks. It is since the change of the weather that it is most to be noticed; for with bread, meat, and wine at the prices they stand at now, it is impossible for people with narrow means to live. In cases of the sad cases I mention, the individuals belong evidently to the better class of society. The dress and bearing, and the awkwardness of the apparel, the dreadful effort to maintain respectable appearances with the sharp pricks and pinches of want, all thus disclosed a state of circumstances sedding any further certificate of any sort or kind. I repeat it—the air a form of distress that has not been visible since the year 1848 and 1849.—Correspondent of London Review.

There is now in course of manufacture at Wolverhampton, a new patent keyless lock, having 244,140,625 combinations.—This lock is the invention of Count Kersolon a Frenchman, but is now the property of a Mr. Lespeit, it has five rollers, and each roller is marked with 25 letters of the alphabet. If the letter at which it is set should not be discovered, the exhausting of all the variations necessary in that case to the opening of the lock would require an immense expenditure of time. It is intended to place one of these locks upon safes that are being made for exhibition at the forthcoming World's Fair. In case of the safe it is prepared to put the sum of £200, which is to fall to the lot of the person who may be fortunate enough to effect an opening of the safe.

FINNA

FLAX COTTON AND FLAX WOOL

GREAT!

It is a well known fact that the profits of Journeymen Manufacturers are small, and for this reason these subjects:

The question of to-day is in relation to cotton, and a substitute to be derived from the flax fibre, and how far the two preparations of flax may be made to become the substitute. Neither cotton or wool can be superseded by the flax fibre, but their use can be largely diminished by this substitute. In all cases of mixture of flax fibre or wool, flax is supposed to extend, but it is known and acknowledged that as a substitute for cotton, to mix with wool, it has qualities that cotton does not possess. It will dye in the same kettle with wool, and take the same shade of color, excepting one or two. It takes colors as permanently as wool, and more permanently than cotton. For a blue it requires a little longer time to attain the same depth of color upon flax, that is, flax takes color from indigo somewhat more slowly than wool. In the working, cotton does not compare with good like flax in the finished goods, the yarn, in the working over machinery, there is a great difference to be discerned by an experienced person, but flax properly prepared for working with wool, looks like wool, and at first sight would deceive judges. Mix such prepared flax with wool of a fibre coarser in appearance than the flax, and spin it into yarn one half flax and one half wool and any manufacturer of experience may examine such yarn, and he will find he is unable to detect the presence of flax, either by the appearance to the eye or the feeling to the hand, the same character remaining to the yarn to all appearance, as if it was all of wool.

Such a fact speaks a volume in favor of flax as a substitute for cotton in woolen goods, and as a partial substitute for wool itself. Those who have worked flax, properly prepared, with wool into woolen goods, say it works without any trouble and as well as wool alone. Woolen cloths of every description called army goods has been made 25 to 30 per cent of flax, and pronounced by the best of judges to be superior to the same description of goods of all wool, from the same mills and machinery, and a certain kind of flannels is very much improved, both for looks and for use. So it is with jeavers, which is better, handsomer, and a more durable article for the admixture of flax into its composition.

There have been goods enough produced and put into market to establish the fact that Flax can and will be worked with wool to a large extent. In many cases producing a new article for consumption better adapted to the popular wants than cloth entirely of cotton. In the case of print cloths it greatly improves the fabric, such cloths, half flax cotton and half cotton, finish better, take the "fast colors" much more brilliantly, and a more clearly defined figure from the printing cylinder upon the surface of the cloth. The printers prefer them to print and finish, and they will be taken in preference in the market to the same pattern and cloth manufactured from cotton alone, as they will form a drapery of a very different character from when made into dresses. The combination of the two materials can be made in a great variety of proportions, producing a desirable variety of fabrics. The three materials can also be mixed in various proportions, (wool, flax, and cotton) and make new varieties of goods. Flax can with advantage be made, with wool, in flannels, satinets, cassimeres, coatings, pantaloonery, &c., &c. The variety alone of new fabrics that will come into the market from the use of the flax wool and flax cotton invests this subject with very great importance.

A MODEL SIGN BOARD.—The following was put upon the door of a house occupied by a father and son—the former a blacksmith and publican, and the latter a barber:—"Barnes & Son blacksmithing and barbers work done here, Horseshoeing and shaves on hare, would bleeding teeth drawing and other ferary work, all kinds of spiritus likers akording to the late commercial treaty. SPRATTS' RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers: is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white rust-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod. Professor Croft had a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, his positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, causing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fail in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts off safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Common iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect to feet from the point.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPerintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods so highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE, we present you with a perfect likeness of Tezuco, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills" has spent the greater part of his life in travelling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is no unfounded fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it at once distributes to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and when the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life soon dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, advised as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. &c. This Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and sound, cleaning and revitalizing the vital organs.

Please to bear in mind, it is to us, that we are able to place within your reach, a medicine like the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and obtain the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

☞ The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Tezucans, a tribe of Aborigines in Mexico. See the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "Great Medicines" of the Aztecs.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they do not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become a synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall reserve the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

DR. J. C. AYER & CO.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

The beds of the beds have, as a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. GRADATION.

FROM THE GERMAN OF PFEFFEL.

A sparrow caught upon a tree
The plumpest fly; all, all unheeded
Were struggles, cries and agony,
As for his life the victim pleaded.
"Nay, quoth the sparrow, you must die
For you are not so strong as I."

A hawk surprised him at his meal,
And in a trice poor sparrow spitted,
In vain he gasped his last appeal:
"What crime, Sir Hawk, have I committed?"
"Peace!" quoth the captor "you must die
For you are not so strong as I."

Down swooped an eagle, who had spied
With grim delight the state of matters,
"Release me, King," the victim cried;
"You tear my very flesh to tatters"
"Nay," quoth the eagle, "you must die,
For you are not so strong as I."

A bullet whistled at the word.
And struck him ere his feast was ended.
"Ah! tyrant," shrieked the dying bird,
"To murder him who ne'er offended."
"Oh!" quoth the sportsman, "you must die
For you are not so strong as I."

DR. GUTHRIE

ON THE EDINBURGH CATASTROPHE.

In a speech delivered in the Free Church, Coupar Angus, Scotland, on Tuesday ev'g., the Rev. Dr. Guthrie made the following observations on the awful catastrophe in Edinburgh:

You must all have heard of that awful calamity which filled the town of Edinburgh with gloom and woe on Sabbath morning, and which is God's voice speaking in a very striking way to the whole community.—"When the lion roareth, who will not fear?" and when God speaketh—and He never spoke to my ear in Providence as he hath spoken now—who will not attend and learn a lesson from it? We were all surprised and shocked when I went into church on Sabbath morning, to be told that a house had fallen between John Knox's house and the North Bridge, on the north side of the High Street, and about five houses above John Knox's house, and that a number of people had been killed. Well, I could not go then, but I went down after service in the afternoon, and there was that spacious, noble street crowded with people as thick as these before me. Knowing some of the officers of police, I got through the crowd, and I got to the pavement opposite where this house had been, and there was a most awful shocking spectacle. The whole of the front wall of the house had fallen, and there remained the east gable, the west gable, and the north wall. These are not gables like those you have about Coupar Angus, but gables that towered to the height of eighty feet—for it was a house of seven or eight stories—and so they still were standing above, while those that had been their inhabitants the night before were there below, buried in the wreck and ruin of their own houses. By this time they had got out some twelve or fourteen bodies, and they were unwilling to work any longer. They had begun at two o'clock in the morning, and now it was four o'clock, and they were afraid to work any longer—first, because the darkness had come on; and second because the storm had risen, and the wind was blowing "great guns," as they say, and every moment many people expected that the enormous pile of building, eighty feet high, was to fall down and to bury in death those who were attempting to rescue any who might be living. Then next morning I saw many things that were very touching indeed. That evening it was in the failing light of day, and it was a most awful thing to see the dresses on the walls three or four storeys high, which had been hung up by the inhabitants before the building sunk, carrying men, women, and children—sleeping, waking, sinning, praying, however they were engaged—down into one grave in an instant of time. In consequence of the floors giving way there were wardrobes which were exposed upon the wall, and it was a horrid thing to look up there and see three or four gowns moving and shaking most ghastly-like in the wind of the night, and think that right down below were those that put them off last night, and in perfect health, now lying begrimed, and mangled, and blackened corpses. I was struck with a suit that was hanging upon the wall. It was five storeys high—much higher than your steeple here—and its owner had hung it on the wall. Little did that man think that that staff was never to be in his hands again! It appeared to me to say that his pilgrimage had ended, and that the pilgrim had laid up his staff. Would to God we knew whether that man's pilgrimage had ended in the rest that remaineth for the people of God. There were looking-glasses hanging up there, where, I have no doubt, woman had admired herself—and there they were flickering in the evening twilight. There were two clocks, too, about seventy feet high, that told the hour when the catastrophe had happened, and they were emblems of their owners below—death had stopped the pendulum. The one had stopped at half-past, and the other at five-and-twenty minutes past one, when the crash came, and the mass of building, seven storeys high, descended as if it had been rocked by an earthquake to the earth. They had been stopped by the dust, and the stones and the rubbish which had fallen, and there they hung, mute indicators of what had happened to those below, whose lives had been stopped at that hour. By this time, on Sabbath night, they had taken out about fourteen or sixteen persons dead, and a number more had been carried to the Infirmary. Next day, as early as possible, I went away to the scene again to look at it. It was a hideous scene. The three walls, though rent and shaken, were standing, and the clothes were still hanging upon them. Other articles might be seen, from which it was plain that the hands which had placed them there on that fatal night had been preparing for the Sabbath day. The clothes—the week-day clothes laid past, and the Sabbath clothes laid out. There were four or five fire-places with the coals on the fire, and in some of them the very fires were burning, after the hands that kindled them were paralysed in death. There were many indications that the people—like those of the Lord's time, and before the flood—never dreamed of the calamity that was coming on, and had made all their arrangements for "to-morrow."—One man that was mercifully preserved—I see by to-day's papers, and whose birth-day was on Sabbath, had bought two bottles of porter, with which he was to have observed his birth-day, one of which was still standing by the fire side, where he had put it on Saturday night. Having seen the building I was asked to go and see the bodies. Well, I was not anxious to see them from curiosity, but for the sake of the impressive scene. I have seen many dead bodies—I have seen forty dead bodies laid out in dissecting rooms at the same time—and a very shocking sight it was—but they had all died a "fair straw death;" they were all washed, the features were thin and pinched, and they had all the marks of death upon them; but of all the sights I ever saw before, those in the police office were the most affecting. I entered the office, descended some stairs, passed through some cells, when the man flung open the door of the dead-room, and there, ranged along the floor, partially covered with blankets, were six or seven women and two men lying against the wall, and behind me there was one man lying on a table. There were nearly as many in another room, and it was an awful lesson. Ah, my dear friends, if you could think and see what death will bring you to, it would destroy all worldly vanity. If you could have seen those bodies as I saw them, and heard, as it were, from their lips, "Be ye also ready, for ye know neither the day nor the hour when the Son of Man cometh," it would have shocked you, but I hope it would have done you good. These bodies bore evidence that the death in many instances was in a moment. They were dug out of the ruins of their homes—some of them 10, 12, or 14 feet below that mass of rubbish. Some of them had been suffocated there; some of them had had time to pray; and there was one woman whose face bore all the evidence of slow suffocation—but, although it was horrible to look at it, yet it was accompanied by this consolation—that woman in her dying moments, might have prayed for the mercy she needed, and He who granted it to the dying thief might have granted it to her. Another had had time to know what had to happen: I have seen pictures of the countenances of the damned, I have seen a painting intended to represent the horrors of hell—but there was one woman's face there that I shall never forget. She seemed just to have waked from her sleep—to have seen the gulf on which she was standing—that in another moment she would be in eternity—and the eyes, and the mouth, and the whole face was a picture of unutterable horror, and, when that horror was on her, death fixed the features. There she lay, a most ghastly spectacle. At another place, I saw a babe lying on a mother's breast. It was most touching to see it—the dead mother and the dead babe in her arms! There was a mother lying beside her husband; he was a powerfully built man, a perfect athletic in appearance, and there he lay as if he still slumbered, without a mark of pain or suffering on his face, and beside him, as they had lain living, and lain loving, in one couch together, lay his poor, cold, dead wife; and so sudden had death been there that she lay with her hand, as I have mine [suiting the action to the word] upon her cheek, she hadn't had time to move a finger when she died. It was a most affecting sight, and it was also a very instructive one. I have heard many a sermon on death, but I never heard a sermon on death like that I heard from the livid lips of those corpses round me. I seemed to hear the voice of God saying, 'Now be ye ready!" "Make your calling and election sure!" "Now is the accepted time and now is the day of salvation!" Mr. Bain from that pulpit—Mr. Marshall from his—Mr Burns from his—as I have often from my own, urged upon our people to make ready—to do it now—not to leave the house of God till they have sought peace with God, because they did not know how soon or suddenly they might die. They turn to us a deaf ear; but ah! my friends, there is truth in our appeal, as I saw there. These people laid themselves down in bed, most of them never dreaming of the calamity so soon to overwhelm them and theirs. You, in your turn, thank you will rise to-morrow—and I know there are those here who have their very work planned for to-morrow—they have this place to go to, and that person to see—and they are already calculating on the morrow. (A pause of some minutes.) I saw yesterday what told me never to speak of to-morrow in such a sense of the word—we may never see it—and I come here this night fresh from these dead bodies, and I would betray my trust and be false to your souls if I were to leave this place in which I am standing without making an appeal to you now to seek the Saviour. Seek Him now. Don't wait till to-morrow. There are those now within the reach of my voice who may be as dead to-morrow as those I saw laid out yesterday. Now, are you ready to die? Suppose you had gone to Edinburgh, and that some accident had taken you to that fatal house, and that you had laid yourself down to rest there and sleep, and passed from that sleep to the "sleep that knows no waking;" suppose that now you were lying cold, stiff, stark dead in that place where I was yesterday—where would your soul have been? Happy those whom death found that night upon their knees! Happy those who before they lay down to rest, went down in prostrate prayer to God, and sought mercy at His hand! But oh, my dear friends, what of those who didn't. It was an awful night and I tell you I was thankful to one, so far as I could see, that there were none among all those corpses that had been feasting a vision, an impure, or an unholy life. They were, so far as one could learn, or see, decent people, which is not the case in many of the houses in that locality. I left the cell of the dead, and went to the cell of the living. There I saw a poor, emaciated child, ill nursed and ill-cared for. She had been taken out of seven feet of rubbish, after lying three hours among it, and she was lying on a bed asleep. She looked almost as like the dead as those I had left, and I did not disturb her. There lay on the floor two pretty little girls, interesting and intelligent. I asked one of them, "Had you any warning?" "Oh yes, sir," she said, "my mother heard a noise like a great crack, and she rose and said the house was falling." "And what happened then?" "Oh, you see, sir, she heard no more of it, and she came beside me to bed." And I said, "How long did you be in bed before the roof and building fell?" She said, "Perhaps, sir, I was ten minutes in my bed when the roof came in and fell upon us, and I went down . . . down . . . down . . . till at length I remembered no more about it." Ah! that child was like one of whom the Bible says: "How great is thy mercy toward me; thou hast brought my soul from the lowest hell"—which may be translated "from the lowest grave." That child was, as it were, one brought up from the grave. They dug her up by torch-light—the brave, bold men—expecting every moment to be buried, and very likely might have been, in the same grave with those they sought to save. By torch light and gas light did these brave men dig in the depths of the night among that rubbish. They heard the wail of the suffering, they heard the howling of the dog, and the strange sounds with which the peace of a Sabbath morning was disturbed, they heard the roaring of the wind, which at any moment might have pronounced their doom, and yet on they dug, although they might have instantly been hurried into eternity—and they reached this child and her little sister, and they found them like two corpses. No sign of life there. They were dust begrimed, and the nostrils and the mouth were filled with lime and dust; but still, if means were used, they might live; and the doctor told me that, just as you have seen a man shake a watch when it stops, and it will set it agoing again, they shook these children, these corpse-like bodies, and the doctor had his pulse upon their wrist. The pulse begins to beat, there is life there! and they carried them, and they washed them, and they cleaned the dust and the lime out of their mouths and out of their nostrils, and they gave them stimulants, and there I saw these two living children thus marvellously plucked from the jaws of death. I see from the newspapers of to-day that the parties had ten minutes' warning. Ten minutes opportunity to escape! How much turned on these ten minutes! Some took the warning and fled, and are still living—ten minutes saved them! Some neglected the warning, and went to bed—and are dead! Ten minutes ruined them! Ten minutes may do the same with you. The lives of those in that building turned on the use of ten minutes. Ten minutes' prayer will save a man—the thief didn't pray ten minutes—but ten minutes' neglect of prayer will damn him for ever! Some take the warning and go to heaven, others neglect the warning and go to hell. Which of these two parties will you rank yourselves in? I was struck with the lesson that the event teaches us; they were warned, but many did not take the warning and have perished; and some were saved just as sinners are saved. How was that thief saved? That thief was saved, as you would say, "in the nick of time," he was saved "by the skin of his teeth,"—and of that there was a remarkable illustration in this house. There was one family the name of Baxter, living in the fourth storey,—none of the members of which family perished.—The head of this family was a flesher—and many of these men in our large towns are hardly put to it to get through with their work on Saturday night and get home by Sabbath morning. It was Sabbath morning when he reached his home. His wife and children were gone to bed. She rose and made him some supper, and then she went to bed again, but just as she was falling asleep she heard a tremendous crack as of stones falling, and cried out—"There's a warning!"—evidently from a superstitious motive. He laughed her to scorn; but ere his laughter was ended, there came a voice from the next room, where a grown up daughter slept, with other three daughters—"Oh! father, father! mother, mother!" The father burst open the door; and fancy his astonishment and horror, when he saw the bed on which his four daughters lay split in two! The sinking of the room had already begun! With energy and promptness he pulled the inmates out of the room, got up the whole of his family and turned them to the door. The wife with a woman's modesty, wanted to dress before she rushed out; with the promptness of a man who knew that every moment was precious, he pushed her before him. Away went the children, and the wife, and the man, fleeing for their lives. It so happened that the stair leading to the fallen house communicated with a landing in a house that stood,—they rushed across that landing, and by the time that the man had come to rush across it the house was falling, and there yawned a gulf between the father and his family—the house was falling, and the chasm was widening and yawning wider and wider, when he just made one bound and cleared it—and by that means he lived!—he lived! And when he and them got across, what did he do? Ah, my dear friends he did what we will do in the day of judgment. And what is that? When you and I raise from the grave, if we are God's people, we will begin and count and see if all our children are there—if this son, this daughter—if they are all there—that we may go to our blessed Saviour and say,—"Here am I, and the children that thou hast given me." But when he got across the gulf one was missing. God forbid that any one of your children should be missing on that day, and if any of you has an unconverted son or daughter who is going to the ruin and to the bad, oh! pray for them now that, before the chasm is wider, they may leap it and get across and be saved. He began to count, and there was one unbelieving child—one lost, the youngest was missing,—and just as a christian father or mother will pray more, and think more, and plead more with, and be more anxious about, an ailing child than they are about a well doing one, so this father and mother forgot almost everything in their anxiety about the missing child. Did it perish after all? The father, after he had seen them all before him, found afterwards that his youngest child was not there! But by God's mercy she was saved. She had been before them, but the young creature, wakened out of sleep, amid the tremendous excitement of the imminent peril and danger, and the roar of the falling building, the air filled with a cloud of dust, the confusion, the cries, the screams, and the groans of the sufferers, the girl had wandered down stairs, where she was found weeping at the bottom of the stairs by a benevolent gentleman, and taken by him to his own house. He, however, found out who she was, and restored her to her parents' arms next morning. I have gone further than I intended, but, my friend, that circumstance touches us many lessons. There was a warning—they heard it—and they were looking for the house falling down. The doors hadn't been working for months—one man states that the door of his room, in opening and shutting, had so pressed upon the floor that the floor of the place had worn to a ½ of an inch. The people had warning in their doors. There were cracks in the roofs, and the people had warning in this; the floors were sinking and the people had warning in this; the plaster was tumbling off, and people had warning in this that the house was tumbling and about to come down. Well, I was just thinking within myself how many warning we have had, and we are just as careless. The hair drops off a man's head; the teeth drop from a man's jaws; the light and power of vision fade from a man's eyes; he finds it difficult to climb a hill; and cannot do the work he once did; the couples of the house are trembling—these are the warnings that this house in which we live is sinking to its fall. "Ah!" you say, as I heard people say in the coach to-day, "Well, I wonder how on earth those people did not take the warning!" How on earth does many a man take warning that he is dying, to make ready for the inevitable hour when he goes to the bar of judgment to have sentence pronounced on him for time and for eternity? Would it not be a grand thing if anything that has been said here to-night were to warn any of you?—How I would have rejoiced if I had plucked one of those children from the ruins! And would not I rejoice more if I could pluck some sinful souls out of a sinful world, that they may be saved eternally? And now, my friends, go home this night, take warning, and don't put it away. Don't say "It is all very well, but it don't apply to me—I will see to-morrow—I will see another year." If you see to-morrow in that state of sin, I tell you there is far less likelihood of your being saved than there is to-night. There!—see these people lying among that rubbish, and take warning to delay not a moment. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might," and, therefore, take warning and live. Live! What for? Live for God—live for Jesus—live for the good of perishing souls! How did the men of Edinburgh turn out that night to work all night long to save those poor perishing creatures that were buried in the ruins of their houses! "Ah!" you say, "so would I if I had been there! Would I have lain in my bed—would I have laid my head to rest upon my pillow—would I have spared any exertion to bring help to those my perishing fellow-creatures? I would have worked with these hands till they were covered with blood, before I had slept while my fellow-creatures were perishing!" My dear friends, there are hundreds living in sin, whom it is as much your duty to save and see that you act about it, both by your life and conversation. [The rev. Doctor then at length practically enforced the duty of each individual becoming an active centre of Christian influence and warning to others; that he nor they might be called away unprepared.] He continued—And now, if any of you asks me, in conclusion, "What ought I to live for," I shall answer him thus—God grant that I may be able "To live for those that love me,

For those that knew me true;
For the hearen that smiles above me,
And waits my coming, too;
For the cause that needs assistance,
For the wrongs that lack resistance,
For the future in the distance—
For the good that I can do!"

[The Rev. Doctor sat down amid comparative silence, which might be taken as the highest tribute to his eloquence from the audience, which had not at the close sufficiently recovered from the feelings of awe and grief with which they had listened to his description of the harrowing accident in Edinburgh, to be able to testify their thanks in the usual noisy way. During some parts of his speech, the expression that "a pin might have been heard to fall," scarcely depicts the intense and almost painful silence of the audience; and at other parts the emotion of several females was plainly audible.]

ADVERTISING STRAY CATTLE.

Although it is a common practice for parties losing cattle as well as those finding them, to announce the fact in the public papers, it is questionable whether many know the law which applies to the case; the practice being resorted to as a matter of convenience, and the best means for aiding discovery. The law is chiefly applicable to parties finding and harbouring stray animals which may come about their premises; and these should understand that no claim for keeping a stray animal can be legally made until after it is advertised in some local newspaper. It has been a matter of doubt whether the cost of such advertising can be claimed by the advertiser; but by a decision lately given in one of the Division Courts of Huron, it would appear this question has been settled, the Judge having decided in favor of recovering the expense incurred for advertising in such cases.—Sarnia Observer.

A HAME'IT SPEECH.

Sandy Walk, the town drummer of Belmeau, was last week presented by a number of his admirers with a brav new uniform, and his wife with a new cap and crinoline. A meeting was called on the interesting occasion, and Sandy, donning the new uniform thus replied to the toast of the evening:—"Aweel, gentlemen, I mun jist thank ye a' for the fine new dress ye're gien me the nicht; an' a—an a—preserve me if I ken what to say—[applause]—but there's nae use in mysel as thing and then anither, see I'll try an' be worthy of the brav claes the best way I can. I'll try an' keep myself sober enyhoo—[applause]—if I can, gentlemen, for I think they answer me guy weel, and I'm gey proud o' them. Gentlemen, I'll a—gentlemen, I'll—weel, as fac's death, gentlemen, I dinna ken what to say [very great applause]—to let ye ken how I—diarespect ye a'—[tremendous applause]—nae I'll no say nothing mair a' boot it. [Bursts of applause.] Kirsty,—hie, ye muckle gom'ral, what div I ken about stanin' up and thankin' the gentlemen. I'll gie them a sang if they like." [Cries of "Brave—a song from Kirsty."] Sandy: "A sang, ye daft beuon! Weel, gentlemen, if she can sing a sang, she maun hae learn't it the nicht, for I'm blest if e'er I kent she could sing afore." [Thunders of applause.]

THE SOUTHERN FIRES.

The frequency of fires in the Southern cities of late cannot fail to attract general attention. Within the last few days in addition to the great fire in Charleston, Montgomery has been repeatedly fired, commissary stores worth $1,000,000 have been destroyed in Nashville, a number of large buildings have been burned in Norfolk, a powder mill has been exploded in New Orleans, the theatre and other buildings have been consumed in Richmond, while Charleston has been fired a second time in two places. The first accounts represent these fires as the work of incendiaries, though some of them are subsequently explained by the Southern papers as resulting from other causes. Their number and their character, however, prove them to be the work of disaffected persons, whether slaves or desperate Unionists is not known. Enough has transpired, however, to show that there is a strong insurrectionary element at work in the seceded States. We at the North can have no other feeling than that of pity for the sufferings of innocent people rendered homeless and destitute by these conflagrations.—But if they continue, they will undoubtedly be an important though involuntary auxiliary to the Union arms. We know that financially the Southern people are in a desperate strait, and with insurrection in their midst, and incendiaries watching their chance to lay waste cities in ashes, a sweeping victory in Virginia, or on the Mississippi could not but go far to break the back of the rebellion.—*N. WHY PEACE IS NOT YET ASSURED.

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian writes as follows:—

"Read by the light of Mr. Seward's letter, declaring recognition to be a casus belli, it is most significant: 'It is feared that all these things will turn the scale in favor of war. When I say this result is feared, I use a word which is by no means applicable to a large number of public men, who look beyond the affair of the moment. The conviction forces itself upon many that the day is not far distant when the Southern Confederacy must be recognized; and that recognition may be expected to bring about fresh difficulties, in which we must be prepared to maintain our policy. It is with this view, and as a demonstration of our attention to hold our own way, that the Government are sending out ten thousand men to Canada without any reference to reply of the American cabinet. If Messrs. Mason and Slidell landed at Liverpool to-morrow, not a soldier less would be sent out. If we are to have war with the North in connection with this United States scheme there could be no more favorable time than the present. It would be a short and decisive war, and would have a vital influence on the preservation of peace and the uninterrupted freedom of commerce for many years to come, without our having to pass through the ordeal of social and mercantile confusion which war, as a general rule, entail.

TO ARMS!

At a meeting recently held of the Ladies of the Town of Belleville, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

"That whereas His Excellency Lord Viscount Monck has thought fit to issue a Proclamation, ordering 75 men from each Battalion in this District to enroll themselves for active service in case their services may be required, to protect our homes; and whereas a great portion of the male population have failed to comply with the order of His Excellency, be it resolved That we the Widows, Wives and

THE AMERICAN PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE IN ENGLAND.

The London Times has devoted several articles to commenting on President Lincoln's recent Message. After censuring severely Mr. Lincoln's silence respecting the Trent affair, the Times proceeds:

"The President has given us, instead of the information we desire, his opinions on the real cause of the present war. The North he says, are fighting for the integrity of the Union—that is, as Lord Russell said, for empire, to compel the South, by force of arms, to live under a Government which they detest. The South, on the other hand are fighting against the rights of the people—that is, against the rights of the people of the North to govern them against their consent. This description ought to put an end to the statement, so often repeated, that slavery is the main matter of dispute. But the South have done still worse, and, not content with questioning the right of the North to govern them, they have even gone to the extent of questioning the wisdom of certain Northern institutions. Thus persons are actually found to wish for a restriction of the suffrage; to contend, in spite of the evidence afforded by the North of the purity of election, and the high moral and intellectual qualities secured by such a process, that it is better elections should be confined to legislators, and not extended to magistrates; and some have even been heard to pronounce the horrible name of monarchy." No wonder that Mr Lincoln, luxuriating in the paradise to which the will of an unbridled democracy has introduced him, and looking forward to a desperate struggle with England, brought about apparently by the same cause, should feel a pious horror of those who venture to think such experience not conclusive, and the existing constitution of the United States a little short of perfection! We have nothing to say for slavery—if she is fighting to emancipate herself from the blind tyranny of a degraded mob, from elective judges and elective governors—he has given his antagonists a better title to European sympathy than they have hitherto possessed, and thrown upon his Government the stigma of institutions which have already brought it to the verge of ruin. But the most remarkable part of Mr. Lincoln's Message is that in which he touches upon the relation of his Government with foreign countries. The fact seems, on his own showing, to be, that all foreign countries have hitherto preserved a strict neutrality; that they have resisted all applications from the south to make common cause with it against the North; and that they have quietly submitted to a blockade, which grievously injures their commerce and manufactures. These facts would have called forth from the chief of any other Government in the world, republican or monarchal, a gracious and courteous acknowledgement of the respect and forbearance with which a nation, not remarkable for carrying either of these qualities to excess, has been treated by all other nations in its hour of trial. Nothing can be more ungracious, more contrary to the usual conditions of international courtesy, than the language with which President Lincoln repays the considerations extended to him. "These nations," he says, "appear as yet not to have seen their way to their object—that is the restoration of commerce—more directly or clearly through the destruction than through the preservation of the Union." This is a broad insinuation that foreign nations are actuated by the meanest and most selfish motives, and Mr. Lincoln is content, as he cannot deny that we have hitherto done right, to express a suspicion that we did so for reasons we cannot avow without shame. It is not wonderful that a notice of foreign relations begun in this spirit should end with the exhortation with which we are already familiar in the circular of Mr. Seward, to fortify the seacoast, the great lakes and rivers.

A TRIAL OF THE "WARRIOR'S" METAL.

THE Times of Dec. the 29th contains an account of the trial virtually of the powers of resistance of this new iron-clad frigate. It says,—The target was a perfection of the Warrior's broadside, twenty feet long; and ten high, made by the Thames Iron Company, of exactly the same materials as the Warrior itself. This was erected at 200 yards distance from a battery of six guns—two solid 68-pounders, three of Armstrong's 100-pounders, and one 120-pounder shunt gun. Every one knew before the experiments commenced that such a target would stand an immense amount of pounding, and the chief curiosity was evinced to see how the teak backing would support the plates; and, above all, how the rivets in the ribs would resist the tremendous concussion. No one, however, was prepared for the astounding success of the result that did ensue, and which showed itself at the close of the experiments, during which the target was subjected to every conceivable ordeal of artillery practice, yet survived comparatively uninjured, and practically as invulnerable as ever. The guns were fired in volleys of threes, and fours, and sixes simultaneously. Their shot were concentrated upon white spots painted on what were supposed to be the parts most likely to yield. On these the fire of the most tremendous missiles,—100-pounders and 120-pounders and even 200-pounder bolts—were directed with a force and weight that seemed irresistible; but in vain. The shot flew off in ragged splinters, hissing through the air, the iron plates became almost red-hot under the tremendous strokes, and the whole target rang like a huge gong, but nothing more. As a rule, the 68-pounders left their marks in massive dents more deeply than the 100-pounder Armstrongs, but the live percussion shell of either did little more than discolor the plates with the smoke of their impotent explosions. Two discharges, each of 200lb. cast-iron bolts, were fired in succession at two different spots, but though, of course, the plates had been often struck before in the same places the additional injury was comparatively trifling. A grand salvo was given with all the six guns, trained three on each of the already-battered spots. As the guns were loaded each with 16lb. of powder, this volley, in fact, was equal to a 600lb. shot fired at the target with 100lb. of powder. The effect of this tremendous trial was to make a gap on the one side of the target about fifteen inches long, and five deep, driving the iron, in fact, almost into the teak.—Some bolts of plates were also loosened, and the plates themselves began to crack under their long ordeal. Yet, strange to say, even under this the strong teak backing was still undisturbed, and not even the paint on the rivets had started. In fact, as representing the side of a ship, she would still have been perfectly water-tight and uninjured. The longeing and grooving by which the edges of the plates are dovetailed into each other had given way, as we always maintained it would, and some of the plates themselves had started outwards as much as an inch and a half. But the target, as a target, was as good as ever. There is only one possible condition in which the Warrior could be placed to be exposed to a concentrated fire as severe as that to which her portion was subjected at Shoeburyness, and that would be if she stranded within 200 yards of the guns of a powerful fortress.—Even then, in such a last extremity, we are very much inclined to believe the Warrior would be quite as formidable to the fort as the fort to her.

The practical result of this grand experiment has been to show that nothing is gained by backing up the armour plates with such a tremendous thickness of teak as twenty inches. It is found that practically ten inches will do as well as twenty, and that the saving thus effected in the reduction of weight will allow another inch thickness to be used in the plates themselves.—Thus the "improved Warriors," now building, instead of four and a half inches of armour and twenty inches of teak, are to have ten inches of teak and five and a half of iron—an addition to the metal covering which is really unnecessary, as they are already invulnerable, in the most perfect and literal sense of the term, to all the efforts of artillery.

A BELLIGERENT PARSON.

The Rev. Owen Lovejoy is sorely exercised about the surrender of Slidell and Mason, and enjoying a seat in the Congress, he has allowed his tongue full latitude against England. He wished to indicate his opposition to the proposed appropriation for the exhibition of American productions at the World's Fair, London, and the following is a sample of how he did it:

"I am very decidedly opposed to this bill. I think it is enough for us, in all conscience, to have been humbugged and dishonoured and disgraced by the British nation, without now appropriating thirty-five thousand dollars for the purpose of an American exhibition there. This disgrace was all that the nation could bear. We march up to it sweating great drops of blood.—We come to it as Christ went up to the cross, saying 'if it be possible let this cup pass from us;' and yet we are required to say that we did it cheerfully—that we did it gladly—and that we now appropriate thankfully $35,000 to fit out commissioners to appear at the Court of St. James. Inasmuch as we have submitted to that disgrace, as we have submitted to be thus dishonoured by Great Britain, I think the least we can do is to acknowledge it, and to stay at home till the time comes that we can whip that nation. Every time I think of that surrender, the words come instinctively to me which Æneas used when requested by Queen Dido to rehearse the sufferings which had befallen the Trojans during the seige and capture of Troy: "Oh, Queen! you require me to renew the intolerable grief of that siege by reacting it." Every time the Trent affair comes up, every time that an allusion is made to it, every time that I have to think of it, that expression of the tortured and agonized Trojan exile comes to my lips—I am made to renew the horrors which I have suffered when the news of the surrender of Mason and Slidell reached us. I acknowledge it, I literally wept tears of vexation. I hate it, and I hate the British Government. I here now publicly avow and record that fact, and declare that it shall be unextinguishable. I mean to cherish it while I live, and to bequeath it to my children when I die: and if I am alive when war with England comes, and if I can carry a musket in that war, I will carry it. I trust in God that the time is not far distant when we shall have suppressed this rebellion, and be prepared to avenge and wipe out this insult that we have received. We will then stir up Ireland, we will appeal to the Chartists of England, we will go to the French habitants of Canada, we will join hands with France and Russia to take away the Eastern possessions of that proud empire, and will take away the crown from that Government before we cease. I trust in God that that time will come."

The New York Times thus comments on this Christian-like display:—

We print on this page these disgraceful and blasphemous words simply to signalize them as a gross libel on American sentiment and American sense. We wish those who from abroad follow the deliberations of our legislative body, in order to catch the spirit and temper of the United States, distinctly to understand that these cruelties which he has the impudence to affiliate to "the nation," represent the views of Mr. Owen Lovejoy, a misrepresentative of the State of Illinois, and nobody else among the twenty millions of the loyal States. To the European enemies of the Republic, and to all Secessionists here and abroad, this speech will no doubt be welcome. For all others, its very absurdity will happily deprive it of all power of doing harm.

We do not favour the appropriation for the purpose indicated, and which was passed by a large majority of the House. It will, we trust, be negatived in the other branch of the Legislature. But our opposition has its origin in quite other considerations than those expressed by Mr. Lovejoy in a speech which disgraced the body in which it was made."

THE WINTER NAVIGATION OF THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Notwithstanding the formal protest of the express which we published yesterday, to the effect that ships come to Bic Harbor every year until the middle or end of January, we hold to our formerly expressed opinion that the Lower St. Lawrence is not navigable for such steamers as are now constructed for crossing the Atlantic, after our winter's frost had fairly set in. Had the "Persia" and the other transports come into the river a week or ten days earlier, they might have landed their men and stores within easy reach of railway, if not at River du Loup itself, and the question of winter navigation would have remained open. As they did not, they have finally settled it. The "Persia" would certainly not have put off to sea had she been able to stop with safty. The "Parana" would not have turned back, when nearly up to Father Point, had it been at all practicable for her to proceed. The "Australasian" would not have reported that she could not get up the river, if there had been no grounds for the assertion. The "Melbourne" would not have turned back unless there had been other difficulties than those which could be cut by the ice saws with which she was furnished. We should of course be far more pleased if we could draw any other conclusion than the one which is thus irresistibly forced upon us. But until vessels are built whose bows can cut through ice-fields, and whose sides are proof against the small ice-bergs which often block up the channels leading into and out of the Gulf, we feel that we must depend upon railways, not on steamships, to give us the means of access to the open sea. Build the Intercolonial Railway as soon as possible; that is the political, military and commercial lesson of the time and events of passing.—Quebec Chronicle.

—It is stated on authority that previous to the closing of the coffin, which contains the mortal remains of the late lamented Prince Consort, a wreath of flowers, affectionately made by the Princess Alice, and a miniature portrait of the Queen were placed beside the corpse.

AMERICAN MATTERS.

It is now about a year since the State of South Carolina declared herself out of the Union. Since then twelve other States have followed her example, and they now form what is termed a Confederacy. It is upwards of nine months since the first overt act was committed by the seceders in the taking of Fort Sumpter. Since then the remaining twenty-one States have acted with a unanimous determination to punish the rebels, and put down the rebellion. For they have raised and sent into the field some 600,000 men fully equipped. Up, however, to the present time no engagement of any amount has taken place, no advantage gained from the rebels. The nation is getting uneasy that such an immense body of men, supported at such a cost, should be doing nothing—there is no doubt that to be effective the men required drilling, and this has been effected in the mean time. Recent advices inform us that plans are maturing for a decisive blow to be made both by sea and land, that will utterly confound the insurgents, and in a short time terminate the struggle. This may be true, and it may not. It is folly to suppose that the individuals on whom the responsibility rests of the command of the Potomac army are not planning some bold stroke which they desire to be successful and which must be attempted soon. The delay in not attempting subjugation earlier may be prompted by humane and wise considerations. It may be that from the information received at head-quarters, that delay in fighting is a scarce of gain to the federals, and an injury to the rebels. From scraps of intelligence finding its way North it appears that great distress prevails among the Southern cities and people, great dissatisfaction in the army, and matters every day getting worse. If such should be the case the Commander-in-chief may imagine he can accomplish his object sooner by delay than otherwise. There appears however, to be a strong pressure on the administration from the Northern people to push on the war. The financial state of the Treasury urges immediate action whilst the European powers are getting impatient at the protracted struggle, and the apparent inability of the Federal people to reduce the South to subjection, and seem almost disposed to acknowledge them as a power. One thing is certain, that its subjugation or the acknowledgment of its independence, cannot be much longer delayed, and if the former be not soon effected the latter is certain. Hopes are entertained that the Burnside expedition is destined to accomplish what two former expeditions failed in doing. At the same time fears are entertained in some quarters that it will be no more successful than its predecessors. The administration, besides the grave responsibilities of pushing on the fighting, are just now seriously embarrassed by obtaining money to carry on the war. The governments "promises-to-pay," the Banks loudly assert, must have a tangible assurance beyond that on the face of the notes, that unless some bona fide security be given they cannot assist it further. The want of a man suitable for the emergency is much felt by the administration, and will be felt severely during the remainder of the struggle. Every man and paper in the country has a scheme to propose for the all-important purpose of raising the sinews of war, but no relief has as yet been experienced. Taxes of a most oppressive character have been already imposed, and fears are being expressed that in the city of New York their effects will be manifest in reducing its population and commerce. "All is not gold that glisters," and the American people will learn by the sad calamity now upon them, that they are neither so rich nor powerful as they fancied themselves to be. An occurrence has taken place recently at Washington that has given rise to considerable conjecture; we refer to the removal of Mr. Cameron, Secretary of war, and the appointment of Mr Stanton in his place. It is asserted that Mr. Cameron has embarrassed the President and administration by his anti-slavery prejudices, and it was necessary to get rid of him, so as to secure harmony in the Cabinet. His successor is said to be a reliable advocate of Lincoln's pro-slavery views, and unity of views will secure unity in execution of measures. The strange position of the President and his advisers on the slave question challenges the astonishment of European nations. The high handed measures of martial law, and the surveillance of the press, established all over the North, contrast strongly with the tenderness of conscience manifested towards rebel human chattels. The dread of violating the constitution in the case of the rebels South, and the ease with which it is violated in the case of freemen North, are anomalies not easily reconciled by lookers on at a distance.

The effects of this war are felt rather severely in Canada, and if it continues much longer we shall suffer much more. In addition to the stagnation of general business and low prices of our staple articles of export, we are threatened—owing to the supervision of specie payments by the American Banks—to be deprived of our specie. Gold in New York, as well as in the South, is at a high premium, and we may expect to see swarms of speculators bearing off the precious metals as they did in 1837. Our wisdom is to retrench our expenses, contract our speculations, and live within our means, and be ready with the return of good times to take advantage of our facilities, to improve our condition. At present we should cultivate the important art of bringing our mind to our circumstances.

There seems to be an apprehension abroad that the suit Woodruff vs. Peterborough has gone against the Town. The learned Judge, as will be seen on a reference to the case published in another column, recommended the Counsel on both sides to agree to a verdict subject to the decision of the Court above. The case was not submitted to the Jury at all, and the recording of the verdict was a mere matter of form.

A VOTE OF THANKS TO THE MAYOR.

At the final meeting of the retiring Town Council a vote of thanks was passed to the Mayor for the efficient manner he had attended to the duties of his office during the past year,—which was suitably acknowledged by his Worship.

We feel confident that no person can have any other opinion than that Mr. Perry has exhibited a laudable solicitude for the welfare of the Town, and in no previous incumbency of the Mayor's office has its very onerous duties been more faithfully discharged.

Most especially does this remark apply to that most unpleasant of all duties, the administration of justice in the Police Court. Under our Municipal institutions the Mayor is elected by the popular voice, and hence the painful duty of inflicting fines upon the very parties he is indebted to for his elevation. But Mr. Perry has had and has exercised the knack when carrying out the By-laws of the Town to impress upon the minds of the unfortunate that he was but the Executive, administering the law, and if any fault existed it was not chargeable to him, but with the law itself. The majesty of the law was more sacred to him than all other considerations.

We are satisfied that few if any of the very numerous cases he has tried during the past year, but will acknowledge the judgment he gave just. He has more than realized the expectations of his friends, and agreeably disappointed those who last year opposed him.

THE QUESTION OF CIRCULATION.

The Leader has withdrawn his forfeit scheme as the Globe has not accepted it, which every one knew it would not. We have been disposed to give the Leader credit for something like common sense, but its strange conduct in resorting to such tomfoolery to make people believe it has a larger circulation than the Globe, stamps it in our estimation as resorting to a miserable subterfuge to hide a position it is afraid to own. The attempts to run down the Globe for its not accepting such silly overtures are mean, and its endeavor to show up the morality of the betting, because the proceeds are for "charitable" purposes, reminds one of what he has read of justifying "pious frauds" where the objects to be obtained thereby were worthy. "The end justifies the means," the Leader maintains, and forsooth, because the bets are not taken, the refusal arises from the fear of being beaten. If the Leader is anxious to settle the question we propose a simple and satisfactory plan for settling the matter. Let the proprietors each choose a known reliable person, who shall examine the subscription lists as they appeared on the 1st inst., or any other date, and let these publish the numbers respectively; we shall then know which paper has the largest circulation. At present the Globe has the credit of the largest. Now Mr. Leader, do you disprove it, and if you make another offer make an unobjectionable one. Your charge of personal abuse, as made by Mr. Brown, is not fair.

Since the above was written we have seen the Globe's figures; here they are, 31,496. Now Mr. Leader, beat that if you can. Give your numbers and we shall then know who to believe. The Globe, moreover, proposes to leave the correctness of its returns to three Reverend gentlemen named by the Leader—nothing could be fairer. But we suppose our simple suggestion will be scouted by the wary Leader.

A HUMOROUS PROPOSAL.

The Hamilton Times makes the following humorous proposal anent the ridiculous bombast of the Toronto Leader:—

"As we are anxious to follow the example of journals of such standing as the Globe and Leader, we offer the following challenge to the whole world.

1st. We bet one hundred thousand dollars that we have a larger circulation in our own office than any other paper in the universe. Proceeds to go to ourselves.

2nd. We bet one cent that we have a larger circulation than the London Times. Proceeds to go to the liquidation of the Provincial debt.

3rd. We bet ten thousand pounds that we have a larger circulation (including both our daily and weekly issues, of course) in the Province than has the Hong Kong Gazette, "or any other man." Proceeds to go to building an asylum for insane editors.

4th. We bet a new hat (not having one of our own, we bet Major Gray's, manufactured by Bridge, Higby & Co., of this city) that our daily circulation is larger than the weekly circulation of the Globe, Leader and Spectator together—that our weekly circulation is larger than their daily—that either is larger than both, and both than either—and vice versa, that all are double the other. Proceeds to go to the Hon. Mr Vankoughnet. N.B.—The above sentence is written in Isaac Buchanan's style, and may seem obscure, but the Spectator can easily explain it.

All the above bets must be taken together, and the money must be placed in our hands preparatory to their taking effect.

☞ We noticed last week the feelings manifested by our American neighbors towards England and Canada. We find in Congress the hate is as rampant as any where else. Where else can a deliberative body of men be found in the civilized world, that would tolerate such savage invectives towards another Nation. Or where else would a press be found so mute upon such an outrage as that uttered by a member of Congress called Owen Lovejoy, in a recent speech, which will be found in another column. The New York Times is the only paper in that country, known to have rebuked the foul traducer,—the venomous hater of a friendly power. His profanity and hate stamp him as a lewd fellow of the baser sort.

Such a speech in the British House of Commons, or in the Canadian Parliament, —admitting the country it is charged against, changed—could never have been delivered. There is too much honorable, manly feeling in both bodies to sit and hear such low, profane and inhuman sentiments.

LIFE ASSURANCE.

Attention is directed to the advertisement of the Scottish Provincial Assurance Company, in another column. It should be remembered that persons insuring before the 31st instant, are entitled to share in the dividend of profits then to be made.

CANADA PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The annual Missionary Meeting in connection with the above Church, was held on Tuesday evening. Col. Haultain occupied the Chair. It was very gratifying to hear from the speakers, of the spread made in the different branches of the Missionary service. But much yet remains to be done, and, as was shown by Rev. Mr. Laing in his eloquent address, British Christians will have to increase their energies to make good the deficiencies in the United States, caused by the unfortunate civil war now going on there. The most interesting speech was that of Mr. Clarke, a missionary to the new settlements to the north of us, who gave some interesting accounts of the condition of the people in his field of labor. He told of the hardships they had to endure, and also of the lamentable state of morals existing among the inhabitants, and of the need of the blessed Gospel there. Rev. Mr. McTavish delivered a speech of great force; though some, that Spurgeonic, it was sound and telling.

The Church report gave good evidence of the great Christian liberality of Mr. Roger's congregation.

The singing of the Choir, under the leadership of Mr. R. Graham, was good. We think a great improvement for the Choir to sing from the Gallery; the music sounded better than from the body of the Church.

THE FIELD BATTERY.

The officers were not chosen at the meeting on Saturday. It was found that the service roll was more than full (72 names), but the required number of horses were not on the roll. Meetings will be held in two or three of the neighbouring Townships, when we have no doubt the men with horses will be got.

A DISCOVERY.

We may not be right exactly in terming the following a discovery, but it is certainly something that it is not much known. We refer to coal or kerosene oil as a cure for sore throat and pain in the chest, from cold: Apply the oil to the throat or chest on a strip of flannel, warm;—a small quantity will do. Bandage tight to prevent the smell of the oil. In no case, it is said, will this fail in effecting a cure.

We know that the patent medicine dealers will not thank us for publishing this information, but we would be guilty of a great wrong if we withheld it from the world.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

There is no true Canadian but must wish success to the Volunteer movement, and it is a cause for much true pride that so many of our young men have expressed themselves as ready to defend their country in case of need. We take a deep interest in the movement, and everything tending to retard its progress must meet our disapprobation. We mention this because we see a very bad feeling springing up between two of the Volunteer Companies of this Town, arising out of a mean accusation made publicly by one of the officers of the oldest Rifle Company against the officers and men of the one now being organized. That the accusation is backed by the men of the first we would be sorry to believe, but the conduct of the officer in question may commit them to a hostile position towards the new Company.

This should not be so. There should be harmony among us all. A fair rivalry can only be of benefit to every one concerned. When the day of danger comes there will be work for us all, and no need of jealousy. Rifles, cavalry, and artillery will have enough to do, and the greater the number of men and officers the better. The cause of so much discontent and ill-feeling should be instantly removed, and we think Rifle Company No. 1 owe it to themselves to apply the remedy. Until they take this course they will appear in the same bad light in which the public now look on them.

TOWN COUNCIL.

MONDAY, Jan. 20, 1862.

The newly-elected Council held its first Meeting.

The Clerk, at the request of the Council, read the standing rules of order.

Messrs. Bradfield, Robert Stevenson, Hughes and Reid, were appointed a special Committee to nominate the Standing Committees for the present year.

The Mayor named Mr. R. F. Kirkpatrick as one of the auditors.

Mr. Toole moved, seconded by Mr. Dickson,—That Mr. Charles Cameron be the other Auditor.—Carried.

The Council adjourned till Friday morning next, at 9 o'clock.

ROYAL ADELPHI DRAMATIC TROUPE.

The lovers of the drama will be greatly delighted to learn that the above talented Company are about to pay us a visit. They will play in the Town Hall for a short season, commencing this evening. The press has noticed them favorably everywhere they have performed. We have only space for the two following:

British Canadian, Port Hope.

This talented Company, after a very successful tour through Canada, have again appeared amongst us. Their excellent performance last night drew much applause from the large audience present. To individualize the respective merits of the principal actors may appear invidious, where all played their parts so well; but the superior acting of Mrs. Stetson, Miss Williams, Mr. Stetson, Mr. Keller and Mr. Sheldon, deserve our especial notice.

The Brass and String Band which lent so much attraction to the performance, is under the leadership of our old friend and townsman, Mr. Freeman. We question if a better Orchestra is attached to any troupe.

All lovers of the drama should not fail to pay them a visit, as they are certainly the best dramatic troupe that has yet appeared in Port Hope.

From the Kingston Whig.

We are satisfied that our readers will believe us when we say seriously that the above named Company of Comedians is the very best that has played in Kingston for many a long day. Last night "Don Cæsar de Bazan" was performed; the drama was exceedingly well acted throughout, and every character properly filled and magnificently dressed. Messrs. Stetson and Keller, Mrs. Stetson and Miss Mollie Williams are dramatists of an ordinary kind. All they do is well and carefully done, and entirely without that rant so disgustingly characteristic of the American stage. The music incidental to the piece was good, and the playing of the three children in the orchestra was greatly admired. The audience, which was large and fashionable, evinced its entire satisfaction by repeated bursts of applause. But, good as the drama was, what shall we say of the farce-acting of Miss Mollie Williams, the life and soul of this company? She is, without exception, the cleverest woman that has played in Kingston in all our long time. Everything she does—and she does everything—is exceedingly well done. She sings divinely, with a pure, rich, contralto voice. She dances a merveille; and her impersonations are excellent. Her Irish boy, her French woman and Spanish Dancer, and her Yankee girl are inimitable. Her whole acting is one scene of joyousness and delight, and she keeps the audience upon the broadest of grins from the time she enters on until she leaves the stage. During her stay in Kingston she will nightly fill the Hall. Messrs Sheldon and Stout, excellent Low Comedians, ably assisted Miss Mollie Williams in the Farce.

The Municipal Council of North Monaghan, at its meeting on Monday last, the 20th inst., passed a By-Law imposing a tax of one dollar each on all dogs over one kept by any person, and authorises immediate destruction of all dogs running at large.

The first part of the By-Law was considered necessary in consequence of the nuisance existing in some parts of the township by the large increase of the canine species, and the latter part was deemed absolutely so from the number of rabid animals which have so lately escaped from their owners and are still at large.—COM.

ON LAWFUL GOVERNMENTS.

SIR.—I find your worthy correspondent "C. S. D." gives his views in your last on what is and what is not a lawful government. He takes for his text an extract from the minutes of a Presbytery, as follows:—"Any established Government becomes by the fact of its existence an ordinance of God, and its execute officers God's ministers." He then adds, "This doctrine is not sound," and proceeds to reason and prove by a reference to Scriptures, the Scotti h Confession of Faith, and an author, the correctness of the position he takes.

I have read many excellent articles in which I fully agreed with your correspondent, and regret that I must differ widely from him on this point. I intend to confine myself entirely to Scriptural proofs, as I deem a confession of faith is as much authority as the Presbytery down South, from which "C. S. D." takes exception.

And in reviewing his article I trust he will give me credit that my sole object is the dissemination of sound doctrine, as this I believe was his object for publishing his views. I would have preferred a private discussion, but as he has given publicity to his views, it seems most proper to meet them in the same way.

I turn to Romans xiii. 1, and I find the Apostle says, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God, the powers that be are ordained of God." Hear, Mr Editor, that thus one text is enough to establish the ground taken by the Presbytery South, and entirely upsets the ipse dixit of "C. S. D." If it is enquired what sort of a power was it to which this obedience is enjoined? I answer it was a "cruel, despotic power, depriving its subjects of their rights, and compelling them upon wrong-doing." It was the governments of Cæsar and Nero,—the upholders of evil, the cruel persecutors of the good.

Again, 1st Peter, xi. 13, "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, whether it be to the king as supreme," &c. Your correspondent says "that the United States is an ordinance of God, not because it exists but because of its moral character." I shall simply ask him how long is it since the North and South were all one? and before the secession were they not the "ordinance of God?" Now that 13 States have established a Government of their own, why not have two ordinances of God in place of one? "Ah," it will be answered, "but the South rebelled against the Union." True, and did not the whole Republic begin its government by rebellion against Great Britain, the only difference being in point of time, and that the original rebels see fit now to split. I do not suppose that "C.S. D." will hesitate to admit that prior to the secession he was ready to admit that the Union was an "ordinance of God."

Was not all its power then pledged to uphold slavery? Did not the North bow down to the Slave power? And has not that very power for 70 years ruled the country? Consult its history and it reveals the humiliating fact. If moral worth establishes a Government an "ordinance of God," I fear the United States will be behind; and so will England, with its "cotton lords."

But what will your correspondent say of France—with its empire and Emperor—Austria, Russia, Turkey, and the other despotic kingdoms of the old world? Is there "moral worth" enough in them to establish them as "ordinances of God"? But I will pursue this point no farther.

The powers of Austria and the Confederate States are as much powers as the United States or Great Britain, and as much "ordinances of God;" and as such, challenge the obedience and prayers of Christians as well for the one as the other. "The powers that be are ordained of God." —See 1 Timothy, 1 and 2, Romans xiii. 2 to 8. And let your correspondent remember that the "ordinances of God," and the "ministers of, God," here spoken of, and to whom obedience and submission are enjoined, were Governments the most cruel, despotic, and unjust, wanting in "moral worth:" and I cannot think but on reflection he will be led to see that he was in error. His early prejudices, possibly imbibed through "confessions of faith," or such unsound writers as Algernon Sydney, whom he quotes, have led him from understanding the matter as God has taught it in his Word.

C. S. D. knows well that men has in all ages been busy to improve on God's plan, but has invariably failed while attempting it. The more we adhere to the Book of Truth, the less fear of our going wrong.

"God is His own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

Yours very truly,
E.

The Great Eastern steamship has been engaged by the Government to be made available, with all possible despatch, for the purpose of conveying troops to Canada and it is highly probable that Bristol will be the port selected for her departure.—Court Journal.

APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS.

On last Saturday another meeting took place in the Town Hall, Peterboro', of the volunteers of the Field Battery, on which occasion Col. Haultain exhibited his regimentals to the Troop. Some of the officers and men of the other companies were present.

Col. H., in an audible, cool, and comprehensive manner, explained the duties of a soldier in the British service. He showed that obedience was and is truly essential, and explained the benefits arising from it.

The Sheriff, Mr. Hall, then enquired if the men wished to choose the officers from the "Nominal Roll." Out of all there assembled only twelve held up their hands by way of approval. He then called on all who wished the nomination of the officers to be deferred, in this the show of hands had a majority, supported by Col. H.

As a member, I am pleased the nomination of the 1st and 2nd Lieutenants of our Battery is postponed. The persons who desire to have the command of the men of this arm of the service are, no doubt, like many of us, or all of us, inexperienced in respect to the exercise and duties of an artillery-man. From my personal perceptions of the men comprising this corps, I can safely assert that it comprises a large amount of mechanical knowledge and literature.

Intelligent men require more skillful men than they to command them. Our officers in prospective, commissioned and non-commissioned, must give satisfactory proofs of superior military knowledge, before they can expect to be promoted, or that we could think to confess them our superiors. The officer who commands us is an "old soldier," honourable and faithful to Britain's interest. We have confidence in him—he knows obedience and is worthy to command.

VERITAS VINCIT.

REMARKS.

In the French service the officers are generally selected from the ranks for their merit. All have a thorough knowledge of the duties of a soldier, and very rarely a commission is purchased.

A story is told of old Napoleon Bonaparte. He was inspecting his Imperial Guard, which was composed of the flower of the French Army, and as he passed along the line his eye fell upon a man of small stature, —surprised at finding him amongst so many heroes, he sharply enquired, "Who made you a Cæsesier," the man replied "What made you an Emperor?" Napoleon was struck with the answer and passed on.

IN CHANCERY.

WOODRUFF, et al, vs. THE TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

Counsel for plaintiffs, Hon. J. H. Cameron, Q.C., and Mr. Thomas Galt, Q.C.; for defendants, Mr. R. A. Harrison, and Mr. R. Dennistoun.

This action was brought by the plaintiffs, judgment creditors, against the Port Hope, Lindsay, and Beaverton Railway Company, to recover from the town of Peterboro' the amount of its unpaid stock in the company, alleged to be £30,000. The defendants pleaded that they are not stockholders as alleged by plaintiff—that they subscribed for the stock conditionally—and that at the request of the Railway Company, before action, they had paid the amount of their stock to the contractors employed by the Company to construct the Millbrook Section of the railway. These pleas were pleaded on equitable grounds. Upon the application of the defendants counsel, leave was given to defendants to add pleas of payment, and set off for a defence on legal grounds. It appeared that in 1846 the Legislature incorporated certain persons under the name of "The Peterboro' and Port Hope Railway Company," authorised to construct a railway from Port Hope to Peterboro'.—Little was done under this charter for several years. In the meantime the people of the Cobourg and Port Hope Road obtained a charter for the construction of a railway between Cobourg and Peterboro'. Afterwards the Port Hope people found it necessary to apply to the Legislature for amendments which were only granted on the terms that their road should be carried northerly to Lindsay so as not to interfere with the Cobourg line to Peterboro'. The Port Hope railway Co., not satisfied with the arrangement obtained authority to construct a branch to Peterboro'. That branch is now known as the Millbrook branch. The people of Peterboro' in 1857 were induced to take stock to the amount of £30,000, for the sole purpose of constructing the branch. One inducement was a mortgage from the contractors in which they covenanted to pay the town of Peterboro' six per cent on the £30,000 stock. The contractors had previously obtained from the Company a lease of the branch for 999 years, and this lease was mortgaged to Peterboro' as security for the stock. Another inducement was, that the Port Hope Railway Company stipulated that the town of Peterboro' instead of paying the £30,000 stock to the Company from whom it was liable to be seized by creditors, should themselves have the control of it and pay it direct to the contractors as the work progressed. The town in this way paid the contractors the entire sum of £30,000, and having done so with the knowledge and acquiescence of the Company, contend that neither the Company nor creditors of the Company have any claim upon the a for it. The evidence was voluminous—chiefly documental. The facts were for the most part admitted, and the questions raised were grave questions of law. Under these circumstances the Judge suggested that the whole matter should be left to the Court to determine, and in order that this might be done in the usual manner, recommended that a verdict should be taken by consent for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the Court. It was explained that a verdict of this kind is not effectual for any amount unless the Court on the law think it should be so entered, and the Judge having strongly advised the parties to take this course, it was followed. A verdict was accordingly entered for plaintiffs for £26,000, subject to the opinion of the Court above.

CASE OF SUICIDE.

On Sunday last a young man named Crimsie, a printer by trade, committed suicide by walking off the pier into Port Hope harbor. Crimsie claimed to have been at the battle of Bull's Run, and to have received a blow upon his head with a musket. He was captured, taken as a prisoner to Richmond, and released on parole. Since that time he had worked in a couple of the printing offices at Lindsay. More recently he was employed as salesman in Mr. Marshall's shop in Port Hope—a situation which he gave up, as he said, because he preferred printing. On Saturday he called at the Guide office in search of employment, and promised to call again on Monday. He stated that he was going eastward in search of employment in case he was unsuccessful in this town. The deceased was an intelligent man, and a person of good address. His body has not yet been recovered, although search has been made for it.—Port Hope Guide

ADDRESS
OF LIEUT.-COLONEL HAULTAIN,

At the Meeting to organize a Volunteer Field Battery, held in the Town Hall, Peterboro, on Jan. 11.

Col. Haultain addressed the meeting substantially as follows:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN!

It gives me sincere pleasure to be permitted to address you under circumstances so much more favorable than some of us had dared to hope for when last I spoke in this place, only a very short time ago.

Then war appeared imminent; now the dark prospect is removed, for which we have every reason devoutly to thank God.

But although the prospect of hostilities no longer hangs over us, it would ill become us to neglect the warning that we have received.

For many year's past this Province has been happily so free from war's alarms, that the idea of any interruption of peace has not been entertained by the great bulk of the inhabitants. During this period a new generation has sprung up, whose peaceful avocations have been unbroken, in many sections of the country, even by the appearance of our own soldiers. Had we formed one Nation, and lived under the same government, with our neighbours, we could scarcely have enjoyed a greater absence of those precautions that contiguous nations think necessary for the protection of their separate interests and independent nationalities.

No wonder then that war, if ever thought of, has appeared to very many, almost as an impossible contingency.

But rude and sudden has been the shock to these happy dreams of perpetual peace and friendliness of intercourse, and rickly shall we deserve the calamities and reverses we would inevitably at first have to endure, should we be found as unprepared as a war at the present time would have found us.

Let us contrast the present condition of the neighbouring States, with what it was little more than 12 months ago. Then some 25,000 soldiers composed the whole of the regular force at the disposal of the Executive, a force inadequate even for the support of internal peace and order, and consequently calculated, and justly so, to produce the greatest sense of security amongst the inhabitants of this Province.

But how vastly different stands the case at the present moment. The Northern States alone, by the report of the Secretary of State, possess a force of 670,000 paid soldiers in various stages of organization and efficiency, learning war in the very best school, namely in actual warfare; and every week becoming more formidable, because more accustomed to the use of arms and military movements, as well as to military discipline.

In the Southern States again we may safely suppose that not less than 500,000 men are becoming trained, experienced soldiers.

I am persuaded that no one can reasonably pretend to fortell the issue of the present contest. Whatever that may be, for years to come the army of those States will be numbered by hundreds of thousands, and their navy but little disproportionate. Should the struggle end in an amicable adjustment or compromise, perhaps drawing more closely together than ever those at present at variance, and more unlikely events have occurred, then with an extended and exposed frontier, we should be contiguous to a nation of prodigious military and naval power,—a nation whose present contending sections both claim grievance against us, and on more than one occasion have shown a spirit of no friendly nature towards us.

It appears to me sheer folly to give mean excuse for remaining in our present unprepared condition that this contest may last for years, and will so exhaust both parties as to render peace necessary for their existence. It may be so, and it will give us time to perfect our defensive preparations. But on the person the best. The expenses are light. It will call forth the spirit of loyalty and patriotism happily so strongly existing amongst us. It will bring much larger numbers within military influence, thereby inculcating principles of order, subordination and honor, which are valuable to all communities. It will give beneficial exercise, and find occupation for many who would otherwise spend their leisure in idleness and dissipation.

It remains with the men, and especially with the farmers of Canada, whether their old habits of defensive inertness, or their sense of duty, loyalty and patriotism, shall prevail. In coming promptly forward, a heavily-increased taxation will be spared the Country.

I will now revert to the object that has called us together. I have received a communication from the chief clerk in the Attorney General's office, requesting me to render my services in the formation of a Battery of Artillery here, also enclosing me the regulations on that head. From the latter it appears that a Battery formed here would at present belong to Class B., to which no gun for drill days is allowed for either man or horse. My opinion is that if the Volunteer system be adopted, Class A. must be considerably extended.

Any person volunteering must provide his clothing at his own expense.

I have spoken to several gentlemen in this neighbourhood who generally agree that those, who from various causes cannot join as active Volunteers, should at any rate assist the movement with their contributions. But I apprehend we shall have no difficulty in getting a sufficient number of men who will not require the aid of others in procuring their uniform. This would consist of tunic, trowsers and cap, which could be obtained for $16, and possibly were a large number ordered, for less than that sum.

(A specimen of the uniform made by Messrs. Hughes of Toronto was shown.—Some of the members of the Rifle Corps were present, who said that one suit would last several years.) Considering then that the first outlay would not have to be repeated for perhaps five years, it reduces the real expense to a very moderate sum.

At private drill I would propose a kind of blouse. This would give a uniform appearance, save regimentals, and give perfect freedom, which is necessary in working Artillery.

The Officers' uniform, Messrs. Hughes would supply for $150, too high a price a great deal—I believe it can be obtained from home at a much less cost.

I am strongly in favor of avoiding every kind of unnecessary expense, and possibly by communicating with the Military Clothing Department, some facilities and advantages may be obtained.

As regards drill, the Act requires not days consecutive training in the year. So long as the Battery continued in class B, a strict adherence to this rule could scarcely be expected. When pay for man and horse is allowed, strict attendance might be required. Should the Battery be formed, we may all hope that a desire to perfect ourselves would prevail, and it would be better in a volunteer corps that men left it, than that compulsion should be resorted to.

One advantage of a Field Battery consists in its having a permanent Sergeant Major, paid by the country.—He would be available at all times for the drill of the battery. To fill the situation efficiently he must be an accomplished soldier, acquainted with infantry, cavalry, and artillery duties. Considering the variety and extent of the material of a Field Battery, it is imperatively necessary that such a man should be attached to it.—My long connection with the Royal Artillery will aid me in procuring an efficient non-commissioned officer.

Members of volunteer corps are exempted from the duties of jurymen and constables, and after seven years service, are exempted for life.

Horses approved by the Captain of the Battery cannot be seized in execution nor from distress an assessment. Neither can they be disposed of without sanction of the Captain, which would never be unreasonably withheld.

The Act requires the corps to furnish an armoury, or accommodation for the stores, &c. This, it left to be provided by the Battery, would be a serious ob-tacle in the way of its formation—I do not think, however, that we should appeal in vain, to the Councils of the town and county, for assistance. Moreover, I see by the Act that certain places are named as centres or depots, where armouries should be built—amongst them Peterborough is named, and the Governor General is authorised to expend £750 on such a building. I believe this sum would be amply sufficient to provide room for the arms, &c., necessary for the district. I have written to the Militia Department on the subject, and have pointed out, what appears to me, the advantages of this town as a retired central point, of an extensive and undefended frontier. I am in hopes that the view I have taken may be entertained by the authorities.

I will add a few words relative to the Artillery service, as very many have had no opportunity of becoming in any way acquainted with it. It has always been a favorite branch of the military profession, and its importance is becoming more and more acknowledged. The pay of the Artillery is one fourth more than that of the Infantry. A Battery being complete in itself, is more independent than an ordinary rifle company, which on actual service is merged in the battalion.

The variety of the artilleryman's duties, and of the stores employed by him, is calculated to excite a much greater and more lasting interest in his work than does the duty of the infantry soldier, although in these days so much attention is paid to the instruction of all branches, that it is generally a man's own fault if he fail to derive both interest and improvement from his connection with the military service. In the Artillery there is scope enough to exercise even of the highest scientific attainments, while to a fond recreation to the most uninitiated.

From all I can learn of the feeling around us, we shall have no difficulty in procuring men, but the right number of horses is not yet forthcoming. The late formation of a Cavalry corps in the town has deprived us of many that would gladly have joined us, and their loss I much regret.

As I have before stated, very much depends upon the farmers in this movement. If the Peterborough Field Battery fail to the ground, the blame will assuredly upon them. In an agricultural country like this, we ought to be able to procure the required number of horses. There in four township contiguous to the town—Smith, Douro, Otonabee, and Monaghan, and I think it is only necessary that our real position should be made known to obtain all we require. Every farmer should be made to long for a Bobtail and Nags, and the novelty of the experiment in this retired locality.

Before sitting down, I would state that amongst the members of the Battery we should require:—1 Farrier, 3 Shoeing Smiths, 6 Wheelers, 2 Collar makers, 2 Tailors, 3 Shoemakers, a Baker, a Butcher and as many as possess of those who are accustomed to the use of the axe.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE "ARABIA."

ST. JOHN, Nfld., Jan. 15.

The steamship Arabia, from Queenstown on the 5th, for New York via Halifax, passed Cape Race at 11 o'clock last night.

The Arabia has two batteries of artillery on board.

Confidence in peace gained strength daily.

Consols had advanced to the quotations current before the Trent affair, 92¼ to 92¾.

Breadstuffs dull with declining tendency, and all kinds were slightly lower.

Provisions quiet, but steady.

FURTHER BY THE "ARABIA."

A suspicious steamer was cruising in the English channel, believed to be the Sumter; more likely the United States gun boat Tuscarora.

Breadstuffs on Friday were dull and all descriptions slightly lower, market closing with a declining tendency. Provisions were quiet but steady.

THE MEXICAN IMBROGLIO.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.

The advices from Havana are to the 7th inst.

On the 28 ult., General Prim, after a most enthusiastic reception by the Havanese left for Vera Cruz to take command of the expedition there. He was accompanied by a portion of the French contingent.

Several of the English vessels had also been at Havana but had not gone to Mexico.

The first news from Vera Cruz had been received by a steamer which left there on the 25th ult.

According to accounts brought down from the interior by Sir Charles Wyke, the English minister, the Mexicans are making immense preparations to oppose the progress of the allies into the interior. Juarez has issued a temperate proclamation, calling on all parties to unite to repel the invasion, and his call had been almost universally responded to.

It was believed that over 100,000 men would soon be in the field, with 100 pieces of artillery.

Urago was preparing to dispute the passes above Vera Cruz, with about twenty thousand men.

Tampico, it is understood, will not be surrendered without a struggle, for which the place is prepared.

It is announced that on the 28th ult., an English steamer sailed from that port for Matamoras under very suspicious circumstances.

HORRIBLE MURDER IN SARNIA

(From the British Canadian, Jan. 4)

It becomes our painful duty to record one of those grievous charges against humanity, that so frequently result from that 'institution' which, we are sorry to say, receives its principal support from those who move in the respectable ranks of society; we refer of course to the drinking customs of our country.

On Saturday morning last, our town was greeted with the intelligence that a woman named Jane Ward had been killed by her husband, who, it appears, had been in a drunken revel for about a week previous. Information was at once conveyed to the authorities, and a jury of inquest was at once sum moned by his Worship the Mayor, before which the following facts were evolved from the near neighbors, and the child of the murderer and the deceased, a little girl of some eight years.

The child's testimony was given in that innocent simplicity, and child-like sincerity, freedom from restraint, or consciousness of future results, that stamped its genuineness and command of credence. Her story revealed the fact that, during the past week, she and her Ma had been repeatedly turned out of doors by her Pa. That, during that time, Pa had frequently kicked Ma, pulled her out of bed by the hair and struck her with his fists, and told her that if she did not leave his house he would shoot her or kill her with a knife. Last night Pa kicked Ma out, and sent her and me away. I went to Mr. Wiley's, and Ma died this morning." A tale of woe, the pathos of which lies in its being the experience of an innocent child of eight years, whose little heart should not yet have been invaded by the adverse shafts of this world of trouble.

The testimony of four other witnesses confirmed the statements of the child, that the deceased had been brutally treated by her husband during the past week, and that the kicks received on Friday night caused her to exclaim, on reaching her neighbor's door, He has finished me now! I can never recover from this! I will die before morning." Dr. Shoebottom was immediately sent for, but pronounced her case a hopeless one, which proved to be correct. A post-mortem examination was performed by Drs. Burke and Shoebotham, whose testimony proved that the cause of death was inflamation of the internal organs, resulting from external injuries and bruises which the body bore. The verdict of the jury was in accordance with the above facts.

The husband, John Ward, who had been apprehended in a stupid condition in the morning, hardly sensible of what had occurred, was present during the investigation, and at the close was committed to stand his trial at the next Assizes.

A YOUNG LADY MISSING.

A very painful case of this nature has occurred in this locality. Late on Saturday afternoon Miss Emma Gothbert, a grown-up daughter of the Rev. W. H. Cuthbert, of the Irvingite Church, left her parents' residence at Barriefield to come to Kingston. She was observed to take the ice of the inner bay in a direction that would have led to the Kingston shore at the railway track just below where a group of scows and vessels are at present frozen in. A storm of driving snow which began to fall soon after the young lady gained the ice shut out the observer's view of her person, and so far as is known, that is the last that was seen of her. It is conjectured that she has been drowned, for the ice must have been weak and spongy after the thaw which broke it up in the outer bay on Friday; and in addition, it is possible that the young lady may have lost her way in the snow storm coming on as it did just previous to dark, must have quite bewildered her.—Bluffed by the snow storm possibly Miss Cuthbert might have taken the direction of Cataraqui Bridge, near which the ice was unsecured, and there is nothing positively wholly broken up, and then have walked unconsciously to her destruction. Search was made in all direction for her on Sunday, and on Monday men were exploring the ice of the inner bay, which was then completely sealed up by the intense frost of Sunday night. These efforts, so far, have been unsuccessful, and there is nothing positively to, on which can confirm or destroy the painful conclusions which have been formed respecting the fate of the estimable young lady. This may event, coming so soon after the death of Mr. Truscott whilst skating, may well inculcate a wholesome fear of venturing on ice.—Kingston News, Jan. 10th.

—Contracts have been made in Montreal by the military authorities for the manufacture of 2,000 iron bedsteads for the troops expected.

—Col. Samuel Colt, the well-known inventor of improvements in fire-arms, died in Hartford, Conn., U. S., on Friday morning last, of an acute attack upon the brain.

—Among the arrivals at the St. Lawrence Hall, Montreal, is that of Col. Lyons, who, we understand, is to take charge of the organization of the Canadian Militia.

—An arrangement is on foot between Prussia and Switzerland for the gratuitous relief of the natives of either country when resident in another.

—Mr. John English, of the township of Hallowell, was thrown out of his sleigh on the 30th December, when driving into Picton, and sustained such injury that he died in two days.

—The Buffalo brokers are running a muck against each other to secure Canadian money, which is now quoted at one per cent. premium. This is the same money which, a few days ago was pronounced to be bad, and the banks which issued it, "shaky."

—The Memphis Argus of December 26th, says:—

"Within a few days, perhaps, the great battle of the Mississippi will be fought at Columbus, Ky.; and if our soldiers are there overpowered, as they may be, Memphis is lost to the South, unless you come to our help. If Memphis falls, the Mississippi Valley is lost too. We ask our friends in the surrounding States to look these facts sternly in the face before it be to late.

—The St. Catharines' Journal is informed that a colored man (whose name it could not ascertain) was arrested on Monday last at the Ten Mile Creek, on a charge of having murdered his wife. It appears that about a week since the man beat his wife so severely, that she died on Monday from the effects of the injuries received.—Coroner Hutt has summoned a jury to investigate the matter.

—On Sunday evening sixty tons of rifle ball cartridges, which were conveyed by 25 of Messrs. Pickford's vans from the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, were despatched by train from the Euston Square terminus of the London and North-Western Railway, for Liverpool, for shipment to Canada.—This immense weight of destructive material comprises 21,184,000 cartridges.

—The Whitby Chronicle says:—"It is gratifying to know that the Free School system adopted in this town last year by the Board of School Trustees has worked well. The average cost for each pupil has been smaller and the assessment for school purposes less than the previous year, thus setting at rest the fears of those who believed that the free school system would impose additional school taxes on them. Let the system work."

LA SOMNAMBULA.—A lovely young lady, the daughter of a West-end nabob, whose golden tresses have long been her pride and envy of her sex, awoke yesterday morning with her hair shorn as close as if it had been cropped by a barber. She was frightfully bare-headed. The cause of this calamity was soon discovered; Miss Somnambulist had done the deed in a fit of sleep-walking. The curls were carefully gathered and committed to a Fourth-street artiste in hair, who promises to make a wig that cannot be detected. Young ladies similarly disposed should be careful not to leave scissors within reach of their sleeping fingers.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

—The address of confidence to the Queen from British residents in New York has received about one thousand signatures. Among the signers are a number of American born citizens who desired to express their respect for the memory of the late Prince Consort, and their sympathy for the widowed sovereign.

Early on the morning of Thursday, the 9th inst, the premises of Mrs. Leggett, widow of the late J. Leggett, of Marmora, were destroyed by fire. A boy living with the family, first discovered the flames issuing from a woodshed adjoining the main building, and immediately roused the family from their slumbers, and called some of the neighbors. Before they arrived the flames had made too much headway to give any hope of saving the building. They succeeded, however in saving a portion of the furniture and wearing apparel of the family, but all the grain, which had been threshed but a few days before and stored in the house and woodshed, and all the provisions, were destroyed. The loss is estimated at $2,000, upon which we regret to say there is no insurance.

DESPERATE SCENE IN THE CARS.—On the arrival of the 11.45 a. m. train from New York to Bridgeport, on Monday, 20 volunteers got on board with their uniforms on, and bayonets, from Enfield rifles, unsheathed. The conductor, Mr. Sanborn, came along soon after the cars had started, for the fare, when a number of the volunteers refused to hand it over—threatening Sanborn in the most serious manner. Half a dozen bayonets were drawn upon him, when, with great presence of mind, he wrested one from the hands of the bolder, and defended himself. Others of the passengers came to his rescue with clubs of wood, while the engineer threatened to decapitate the mutineers with his axe. At one time four or five of the volunteers had hold of the conductor at once, but he being a powerful man, and armed with the sword bayonet, was able to defend himself. The excitement on board was, of course, very great, but order was finally restored, by all, save one, paying their fare. This one was put off the cars, and the train proceeded on to Hartford. The volunteers were most of them under the influence of liquor.—Am. Paper.

LOSS OF A BRITISH SHIP OF WAR.

NASSAU, Jan. 18, 1862.

On the 29th December the British ship of war Conqueror, 101 guns and 1070 men, struck on a sunken rock on the east side of Rum Bay; and when last heard from the rock had pierced five feet through her bottom. The frigate Bull Dog had gone to her assistance.

The British steamer Gladiator was at Nassau waiting to sail for a Southern port.

FATAL ACCIDENT.

A respectable farmer named John Lynch, a resident of Ops, was killed on Friday evening last by being thrown from his waggon when very near his own house. Mr. Lynch, who was a great lover of horses, some time ago became possessed of a fine, spirited animal, which he had great difficulty in controlling, and which—prophetically, as it proved—he on two or three occasions declared he feared would be the death of him. It is impossible to tell exactly how the accident happened, as no one saw it take place; but as Mr. Lynch was an excellent driver, is highly probable that the horse alluded to either ran away or by springing from the track caused the waggon to upset. The road at the scene of the occurrence is very full of roots and stumps of trees, and Dr. Playter, the coroner, is of opinion that the unfortunate man, after being thrown from the waggon kept a tight hold of the reins until his head was crushed between one of the wheels and a stump; but conjecture is of course vain as well as useless. Though it was some considerable time after the accident that the body was found, it was still warm, and a very large quantity of blood had flowed from the nose and mouth, enough, Dr. Playter thinks, to have proved fatal from that cause alone. The funeral took place on Sunday, and a great number of friends and acquaintances followed the remains to the Catholic burying-ground—there being over fifty conveyances of different kinds in the procession. Deceased, who was a steady, sober man, and well liked by all who knew him, was only 35 years of age, and leaves a wife and several young children to mourn his untimely and violent death.—Lindsay Advocate.

FROM

GUNPOWDER AND GUNPOWDER MILLS.

There are few agents more essential to the progress of our country, in material prosperity, than the article of gunpowder. It not only is its manufacture a source of wealth, but its employment in the developing the internal improvements, and in cutting through the rocks that impede the course of railways through our extended territories, has done much toward making the resources of our vast continent available. In the early records of the use of gunpowder we find it employed as an instrument of warfare, and at the present time it is most intimately connected with the battle-field. But not one third of the powder now manufactured is used for such deadly purposes; and the immediate demand for gunpowder by the Government of the United States, great as it is likely to be, probably will not equal one quarter of the amount consumed by the people in a time of peace.

The first invention of gunpowder, like the invention of many other agents that have exerted great influence in shaping the destinies of mankind, is shrouded in the obscurity of the past. The discovery is popularly attributed to the ingenuity of one Schwartz, a German monk and a chemist of the 14th century. Roger Bacon referred to it in his writings in 1279, and gave the following receipt for making it:—"But, yet, take of saltpetre, with powder charcoal and sulphur, and thus you will make thunder and lightning, if you know how to prepare them." Gunpowder is supposed to have been known to the Chinese at a very early period, and to have been used by them in making fire-works. Saltpetre is the spontaneous exeresence of the soil of India, and the people of that country were probably very early familiar with the article. It was used by the Oxydracæ, a people living between the rivers Hypasis and Ganges, to repel an attack made upon them by Alexander the Great. Philostratus says of this people, "For they came not out to fight those holy men beloved by the gods, but to overthrow their enemies with tempests and thunderbolts shot from their walls."

The earliest known receipes combine the same ingredients in similar proportions to those now adopted as best. These proportions are 75 parts of saltpetre, 12½ parts of sulphur, and 12½ parts of charcoal. The parts of different governments vary somewhat, as do also the proportions of blasting powder, but these are standard proportions of the United States Government. By far the greater portion of gunpowder made in this country is for blasting and hunting purposes; the former being mostly employed at the North and West, while the latter is mostly consumed at the West and South.

A gunpowder mill is a term which signifies not simply the one, but a number of buildings. These are erected some distance apart, so that in case one building is destroyed by an explosion, the neighboring one will be comparatively safe. They are generally located at a distance from any village or inhabited place, and beside a stream which will afford the necessary water power to carry the machinery. The material is transported from one house to another, as the several stages of the manufacture is completed. We recently had the pleasure of visiting the gunpowder works of Messrs. Laflin, Smith & Boies, in Ulster County, New York. The first building we entered is devoted to the charring of coal. Charcoal is the material most easily obtained, but to make good gun-powder it is necessary that proper wood should be used, and that it be charred at a temperature of about 500°. If charred at this temperature, it will afterwards enter into combustion at a heat of 280 ; but if charred at a higher temperature, it requires a still greater heat to burn it. Willow and Alder are the woods mostly used for making the coal.—They being of a porous nature are easily burned, while woods giving a hard, flinty coal are objectionable on account of the slowness of combustion.

The building was perhaps 30 by 30 and contained six cylinders set in brick-work, in which workmen were engaged in throwing in alder wood. The cylinders after being filled are closed, and a fire under them soon changes the character of the wood, and upon opening the cylinders, the small sticks are found perfectly charred, of a dark brown color, and leaving no mark whatever upon the hand, like ordinary charcoal.

Leaving the charcoal house we entered the building devoted to the clarification of saltpetre. This article is mostly imported from Calcutta, in a crude state, and is putrified by being dissolved in large kettles, boiled down, the impurities skimmed off, and then crystalized. The sulphur is imported already purified.

The next building is the mixing room, where the ingredients are mixed in their proper proportions; the sulphur and saltpetre being placed in cylinders together with small copper balls, the cylinder revolves and the ingredients are thus most thoroughly mixed, while the finest dust being confined in the cylinders, is prevented from escaping. Having been thoroughly mixed in the proper proportions, the material is taken to the wheelhouse, and placed in what appeared to us a huge tub, perhaps twelve feet in diameter, and three feet in height. In this tub, the bottom of which is solid iron six inches thick, the sides being constructed of wooden staves, two large iron wheels, weighing 7½ tons each, were revolving in a shaft set in an upright spindle; one being set nearer the spindle than the other, and so adjusted as to cover the entire bottom of the tub in their revolutions. The material is placed in this tub and pressed by those wheels for the space of twenty-four hours, it being constantly kept damp to avoid an explosion.

After being subjected to this process, the powder is taken to the press-house and subjected to the operation of a powerful hydraulic press. The powder is placed between sheets of copper and duck cloth, and after receiving a pressure equal to 120 tons to the square foot, it comes out in hard and brittle cakes of a grayish black hue, from one-quarter to one-half an inch in thickness, and from two to three feet square. This is called milk-cake, and is now ready to be reduced to the size required to make the powder. This is done by passing it through rollers, one of which is so adjusted as to yield when any hard substance gets behind them, otherwise friction might be produced and the mill be blown up. The powder is then boiled, and the dust caused by the attraction of particles is separated. It is then passed through sieves of different sizes, and the coarse and fine powder separated.

AMONG the most important of modern Medical discoveries stands the Canadian Pain Destroyer. As a Family Medicine it is well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pains from Side, Back and Head Coughs, Colds Sore Throats, Sprains, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbis, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Burns, Scalds, Frost bites, &c.—The Canadian Pain Destroyer has now been before the public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single instance of dissatisfaction, where the directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its virtues and magical effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it thoroughly, and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon it being a sovereign remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, incuring the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the torturing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. Orders are coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the Country for further supplies, and each testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

—:o:—

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers; is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod. Professor Croft has a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Building, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, causing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But it it fall in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Common iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE, we present you with a perfect likeness of Tesseo, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was thus that the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter. Disease, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life soon dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivaled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. &c. This Anti Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and vigorous, clearing and reanimating the vital organs.

Pleasant indeed, is it to us, that we are able to place within your reach, a medicine like the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

☞ The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Tesseos, a tribe of Aborigines in Mexico. Get the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "GREAT MEDICINE" of the Aztecs.

Observe.—The Mountain Herb Pills are put up in a Beautiful Wrapper. Each box contains 40 pills, and bears at its top a fac simile of the signature of B. L. Judson & Co., on each box.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will we found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even when no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has

THE KISS IN SCHOOL.

A district school, not far away,
Mid Berkshire hills, one winter's day,
Was humming with its wonted noise
Of three-score mingled girls and boys;
Some few upon their task intent,
But more on furtive mischief bent;
The while the master's downward look
Was fastened on a copy-book;
When suddenly, behind his back,
Rose sharp and clear a rousing smack!
As 'twere a battery of bliss
Let off in one tremendous kiss!
"What's that?" the startled master cries;
"That, sir," a little imp replies.
"Will William Willis, I'soo pleathe—
I thaw him kith Thuthannah Peathe!"
With frown to make a statue thrill,
The master thundered "Hither, Will!"
Like a wretch o'ertaken in his track,
With stolen chattels on his back,
Will hung his head in fear and shame,
And to the awful presence came—
A great, green, bashful simpleton,
The butt of all good-natured fun—
With smile suppressed, and birch uprazed,
The threatener faltered—"I'm amazed
That you, my biggest pupil, should
Be guilty of an act so rude!
Before the whole set school to boot—
What evil genius put you to it?"
"'Twas she herself, sir," sobbed the lad,
"I didn't mean to be so bad—
But when Susannah shook her curls,
And oh! spared I was 'fraid of girls,
And durst'n't kiss a baby's doll,
I couldn't stand it, sir, at all,
But up and kiss'd her on the spot!
I knew—boo, boo—I ought to not,
But, somehow, from her looks—boo, boo—
I thought she kind'o wished me too!"

AMUSEMENTS.

We propose in this essay to offer some few general remarks on the subject of amusements. We have no sympathy with those who would shut out amusement and relaxation of all kinds from society. We believe that human nature requires amusement, and that amusements are natural. It seems that the great and beneficent Creator has written in the heart of every living thing the command, "Amuse thyself." And all beings that are natural yield an agreeable and joyous obedience to this divine command. What means the frolics of the lamb and gay prances of the horse, the jocund sports of the dog, the gambols of the squirrel amid the tree-tops, the dances of the birds to their own music, on light fantastic wings? What means the general joy of the animal creation—spoke out in their sports, their endless diversity of amusements, as varied and gay as the colours among flowers, or the forms of beauty on the clouds of heaven? What means the gladsome gaiety which rings through the morning air of spring, and gives gladness to the sweet hour of sunset? What means the joyous influence which steals into our hearts, when we go out to wake Nature a friendly visit, provoking us to sing with the birds and frolic with the lambkins? What means the merry-making inspiration which creeps in the spirit of mirthfulness along our every nerve, when we meet with a company of friends who have made glad our hearts with a thousand smiles? What means the games, plays, feasts, festivals, dances, bonfires, and illuminations, which are found in all countries and times, and among all nations of the earth, if they do not declare that amusements are as natural as breath, and as universal as life? What mean the innocent jokes which are flung, in playfulness of spirit, at each other, among all people? What mean the glancing coruscations of wit which glitter in the circles of the best men and women of which our world can boast? What mean all the little pleasantries which pass from tongue to tongue like electric sparks of joy, wherever human beings find pleasure in each other's society? They must be regarded as nature's argument for amusements.

There is much in this world that is dark and gloomy. There are a thousand little troubles, trials, and fatigues, which would wear down and make gloomy our spirits, were it not for this merry-making fellow within us, who spices up life most admirably with his jocularity and sport. Nothing is more paralyzing to the mental energies, or more destructive of moral power, than a fixed and sullen sadness, or a cold, cheerless, benighted state of mind.

Cheerfulness is absolutely essential to the mind's healthy action, or the performance of its proper duties. The mind unmoved by the spirit which dwells in amusements, untried by the gales of mirthfulness, is like the ocean sleeping in the cold lap of earth, unmoved by the breeze, and unstirred by the tide. It is still, pulseless, powerless, and will soon become stagnant, dead—a great pool of corruption, in which no living thing can dwell, from which no healthful influence can go out. And, as a healthy and uncontaminated body is necessary for a pure and elevated mind, it follows that the intellectual, moral, and social condition of the being within is improved by the cheerful influence of amusements.

But the question more difficult to decide to the satisfaction of all is, as to what amusements are proper, what gives the glow of health to the physical and moral man, and imparts not in any manner the rightful and proper action of either. Some amusements are good and some bad. In nothing is sound judgment more needed than in the choice of amusements. It does not follow that because amusements are proper and useful, everything is proper that is amusing. Very much of the good of amusements depends upon the kind, and still more the amount.—There is always a tendency of the human mind to go to some extreme, to the end of the road it is travelling. Extremes in amusements, like extremes in anything else, are injurious. Whenever they are made unduly exciting, or are carried to excess, they become absolutely evil. They dissipate the mind, intoxicate the brain with the wild enchantion of delight, waste the solid energies of the soul, destroy the equilibrium of the faculties, break up their harmonious action, and unfinish a positive discord within, besides being injurious to the health. To be drunk with amusement is as injurious as to be drunk with alcohol. It is a paralysis of all lofty purport and moral vigour. A drifting about—scratching time is wasted in—[illegible] with amusements.

It is the evil of the excess in amusements that the thoughtless think with a stigma on the minds of many of the more sedate. They have seen the evil, and deplored it. There is a greater tendency to abuse amusements than almost anything else, on account of their exhilarating effects. They produce a sort of intoxication in the animal spirits, which imparts itself to the mind, and leads it on in a bewilderment of superabundant life, not unfrequently to an injurious excess. Among real lovers of amusements they are almost always abused. They are permitted to occupy too much attention, and the giddy maze of their follies becomes a thief of dissipation. There is great danger of this among active, buoyant, high-spirited youth. Those of such a nature should be extremely cautious in the kind of amusement they choose, avoiding the most exciting, and in the influence they permit them to have upon their minds. There is great danger in excesses. They should be avoided always. The most scrupulous watchfulness should be entertained by every such youth against these excesses. The gay dream of merriment should never become bewildering, should never unfit us for the performance of our duties, should never make cheerless and uninviting the solid avocations of life.

It is a clear dictate of reason that the chief scene of amusements should be at home. Around home clusters all that the heart holds dear. Here is the scene of the most of our labours and trials. Here are our chief joys, our bitterest sorrows. Here are nearly all our real experiences in life. Here are our wants, and here should be our supplies; and here should be the scene of our gaiety, merriment, and joy. Here should be the real music of life. Here should be its gladdest pleasures, its mirth and sprightliness. There is but little danger from an excess of home amusements. Dissipation is equally found abroad. Injurious excitements are nearly all away from home. The evils of amusements are absent from this sacred place. At home, amusements may be guarded from all harm. Associates and associations may be such as they should be. Amusements may here be varied at pleasure, and directed at will.

One reason why amusements have become objects of dread with many people is, because they have been driven from the sacred protection of the fireside; they have been excluded from the only place where they can safely be indulged in, and banished to places from which, in truth, modesty and virtue ought to shrink back. They may be forced amid associations corrupt and evil. Having been found in bad company they have been dishonoured. If they had been kept at home where they should be, they might still have been honoured guests of that blessed sanctuary. Thousands of youths have been ruined or greatly injured, in a moral point of view, by feeling compelled to go from home for the amusements which their nature impelled them to desire.

A proper amount of labour, well-spiced with such sports, is almost absolutely necessary to the formation of a firm, hardy physical constitution, and a cheerful and happy mind. Let all youths not only learn to choose and enjoy proper amusements, but let them learn to invent them at home, and use them there, and thus form ideas of such homes as they shall wish to have their own children enjoy. Not half the people know how to make a home. It is one of the greatest and most useful studies of life to learn how to make a home—such a home as men, and women, and children should dwell in. It is a study that should be early introduced to the attention of youth. It would be well if more were written upon this subject.

LOST BOY.

A CHILD RECOVERED AFTER FOUR YEARS' ABSENCE.

Let children who read the following sketch, feel with what undying affection parents regard their children, even when careless and wayward; and let them remember at all times their obligations of gratitude, helpfulness, and obedience.

An incident occurred recently at the Eastern district police station, of a very affecting character. About three o'clock in the afternoon, Mr. John W. Frank was passing along Gough, near Bethel street, when a boy about ten years of age met him and asked him for a penny. Mr. Frank handed the boy ten cents, and as he did so thought he recognized the child, and asked his name, when he replied that it was Dehring. After some further conversation Mr Frank became convinced that the boy was no other than the lost son of a widowed friend of his; and with this impression he took him by the hand and conducted him to the Eastern police station, when he informed the officers in charge of his suspicion. An officer was dispatched for Mrs Dehring who hastened to the station. On entering, and observing the child, she uttered a shriek, sprang toward him and clasped him in her arms, kissing him passionately, while the tears gushed from her eyes. The boy stood amazed, not exhibiting the least recognition. The mother continued her caresses, at the same time asking him if he did not remember her, and referred to incidents to awaken a remembrance of his home. In a few minutes the boy's countenance changed, tears started from his eyes, and then throwing his arms around his mother's neck, he exclaimed, "You are my mother." On the recognition, Mrs. Dehring appeared to be almost wild with joy. She wept, laughed, clasped her boy to her breast and then prayed. The scene was one which those who witnessed it will ever remember, and which awakened within [illegible] sympathy which found expression in tears. When about six years of age, the boy wandered from his home, and after diligent search the mother came to the conclusion that he was drowned and for years mourned his death. The boy states that he has been living with many different families, who kept him to run errands and do light work; but lately he has had no home, and was compelled to beg during the day, and the money which he collected he gave to a German family, who gave him the [illegible] lodgings and food.—Gentleman's Weekly Gazette.

MILITARY TRAINING IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

From the Rochester Express.

We notice with much pleasure that a portion of the Annual Report of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction is devoted to the question of the introduction into our public schools of a system of military training. The same question is exciting considerable attention elsewhere.

Governors Andrew, Curtis, and Morgan have each recommended it for legislative consideration in their messages; and in different quarters it has been the subject of resolutions and inquiry by local educational boards. The Mayor of Bangor, Me., has already introduced the military drill in the schools of that city, under the authority of the Common Council, and in many private schools and academies in this State it is advertised as a rare and attractive inducement to parents who wish to combine physical with mental training for their children.

We long since witnessed the marching exercises at District School No. 6, and observing the regularity and precision with which these evolutions were effected in a crowded room, the thought suggested itself that, with a competent military instructor, they could readily attain a proficiency in the manual of arms, which children as they are, would render them a formidable and effective organization for defence against any undisciplined body of men. There could be nothing more healthful as a physical exercise, or more exhilarating as a recreation than is presented in the school of the soldier. A gentleman who has paid much attention to this subject in England states that a practised drillmaster thinks pupils may be drilled as early as at the age of five years. The joints are then more supple and capable of being properly trained than at the age of adolescence. Besides, what is learned in childhood is not only better learnt, but rarely ever forgotten in after life.

The State Superintendent truly says that a few minutes taken each day from the hours of school, for the purpose of going through the simple evolutions of military practice and the manual of arms, being afforded for needed exercise and recreation, would fix those habits of prompt and concerted action, that ease and facility of movement in combination and mass which would be the best possible preparation of a citizen soldiery for the sudden exigencies that have befallen us. If it be true that the child should learn that which he will have occasion to use when he becomes a man—and the proposition is too self evident for denial—then, in view of the service which the citizen may be called upon to render in defence of his country, does that preparation which will make such service most effective, become an important consideration in the training of the child?

The superintendent leaves to the Assembly to determine "how far such exercise may be profitably introduced into our smaller country schools;" but with a view to the demand which is likely to be made for teachers competent to instruct in this important branch of training, it has been introduced as a regular exercise in the Normal School.—Legislative bodies, however, are invariably slow in the adoption of untried measures, and we do not look for favorable action upon the proposition at the present session.

We would therefore suggest that the principals of our public schools organize a class for their own instruction, and employ a competent tutor. In a fortnight's time they could acquire a sufficient knowledge of the art of military training to amply qualify them for the post of instructor for their respective schools. The advantages of the exercise would soon be apparent. The monthly examinations would include a military parade out of doors, and the pleasing novelty of such affairs can well be imagined. The schools would soon be numbered by companies, regiments, and brigades, and every graduate of these nurseries of the army would be qualified to lead a column in the field. We seriously advise that our male teachers give this important matter their attention, and not wait for legislative action with regard to it. As the Superintendent remarks, the cost is insignificant, and the advantages cannot be overrated.—Had the system been introduced into our country ten years ago, more money would in consequence thereof have been saved in the present year than would be expended in drilling our youth for a century. Let us drill as well as educate our children, and then we shall always have an army ready for any emergency.

CROUP.

Croup is an inflamation of the inner surface of the windpipe. Inflamation implies heat, and that heat must be subdued or the patient will inevitably die. If prompt efforts are made to cool the parts in case of an attack of croup relief will be as prompt as it is surprising and delightful. All know that cold applied to a hot skin cools it, but all do not as well know and understand that hot water applied to an inflamed skin will as certainly cool it off. Hence the application of ice-cold water with linen cloths, or of almost boiling water with woolen flannel are very efficient in the cure of croup. Take two or three pieces of woolen flannel of two folds large enough to cover the whole throat and upper part of the chest, put them in a pan of water as hot as the hand can bear, and keep it thus hot, by adding water from a boiling tea kettle at hand; let two of the flannels be in the hot water all the time, and one on the throat all the time with a dry flannel covering the wet one, so as to keep the steam in to warm outside; the flannel should not be so wet when put on as to dribble the water, for it is important to keep clothing as dry as possible and the body and feet of the child comfortable and warm. As soon as one flannel gets a little cool put on another hot one, with as little interval of exposure as possible, and keep up this process until the doctor comes, or until the phlegm is loose, the child easier, and begins to fall asleep; then gently wrap a dry flannel over the wet one which is on, or cover it up thoroughly and the child is saved. Whenever nothing but flannels can be dry, [illegible] The same results will follow if cold water is used, the colder the better; the clothes should be of muslin or linnen and of several folds in thickness, large enough to cover the whole throat and upper part of the breast. Hold a dry flannel over the wet muslin, and as soon as the latter gets a very little warm replace it with an ice-cold one. In this manner the most remarkable and grateful relief will be experienced within fifteen minutes if the false membrane has not begun to form. If these applications are commenced on the first approach of croupy symptoms they may be necessary for an hour or two; if delay death is imminent, they should be continued for days if necessary; easier breathing, looser phlegm, and lessening restlessness being the certain signs of improvement the danger is passing away.

Thus hot and cold water are both efficacious because heat is essential to inflamation; if the heat is diminished the inflamation must subside: cold water applied to the skin with successive ice-cold cloths, or a stream of cold water or by a cake of snow, or a piece or bag of ice, causes great coldness in a direct manner. Hot water cools the surface by becoming steam which absorb an immense amount of heat and rising carries it from the body. Water absorbs more than a thousand degrees of heat before it becomes steam or vapor. Hot water is a more agreeable, a less shocking method of affording relief than cold, and is perhaps more generally accessible than ice-cold water. Linnen cloths should be used with cold water, because it is known that a piece of wet linnen or muslin applied to the skin feels colder than a piece of wet flannel both having been dipped in cold water. The linnen is a better conductor and carries off heat more rapidly. In the use of hot water on the other hand woolen should be used because the object is to increase the heat or rather to retain it so as the more speedily to convert the water into steam which carries off heat with many times greater rapidity than an ice-cold linnen cloth.

The reasons for these things are mentioned so that their application may be made more understandingly and consequently more efficiently. Croup is a disease of early childhood, and is always brought on by a cold generally resulting from exposure to the raw damp air of smallpox in the early spring and later fall, March and November.—Hall's Journal of Health.

DIPTHERIA.

The Philadelphia Ledger states that diptheria has been unusually prevalent this winter in various districts in Pennsylvania, and very many cases have resulted fatally, owing to inattention in the early stages of the disease. Some very good advice is given regarding its early symptoms, and how it should be treated. The Ledger says:

It generally begins in a family among the children, one of which will be restless and feverish for a day, or with symptoms not very unlike those which precede the scarlet fever, exhibiting strong constitutional derangement. Then comes on a complaint of soreness in the throat, followed by small patches of white, or sometimes yellowish coating matter on the throat. The very moment those appear no time should be lost in sending for a medical man who has had experience and success in treating these diseases, because there are in fact two diseases to be treated at once. One is in the throat, where there is a local danger; but there is also another in the fluids of the whole body, which is, after all, perhaps the chief thing, though most out of sight.

It is well known that the best mode of treating scarlet fever, measles, and even typhoid fever is to regard them as the effects of some poisonous matter inhaled through the lungs and carried perhaps, as the oxygen gas is carried, through the capillaries of that organ into the circulatory system. In scarlet fever and measels the best treatment has therefore been found not to bleed or reduce the system, but rather to stimulate it so as to aid it to throw off to the surface the poison which in those cases blossoms out on the skin and dies there. The same sort of general treatment is found most useful in diptheria. If a child has an ordinary attack of sickness, or sore throat, a little assistance or opening medicine will generally reduce it. But in a disease of this kind, on the contrary, a generous diet and a gently stimulating treatment seems to strengthen nature to throw off the disease. Whether diptheria is contagious or not has been doubted. In all probability it is not. But it may and does become epidemic in the atmosphere. Whenever there is exposure to it, fresh, pure air is one of the best preventatives and even medicines both for the individual patient and for the prevention of the spread of the disease. A room well aired and lighted and warmed, so freely as to allow of a constant change, without draft, or any extreme of heat or cold, will of itself do much in the way of medicine. But there is no time to be lost in the commencement of active treatment the moment the disease shows itself.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME?"—An Irishman named Curtain was the captain of a little steamer called the Queen, which carried the American mails to and from Queenstown and Cork. He lost the situation, and on the 20th ult., as he was stepping into a boat, some person, thinking him still captain, told him the Queen was drifting down the river, when he exclaimed, "To hell with the Queen!" A policeman named Withers, mistaking the object of his imprecation, swore information against him for using seditious language, and the case is to go for trial at the assizes, if the Crown prosecutor should be of opinion that the case in one which ought to be entertained.

It is only the fool who is pleased with himself, no wise man is good enough for his own satisfaction.

What a glorious world this would be if all its inhabitants could say with Shakespeare's shepherd boy: Here, I am from whatever evil mean that I may do, or mean to do; so that I carry no man's happiness; glad of other men's good, content with my farm.

IRISH RELIEF MEETING IN MONTREAL.

From the Transcript.

This meeting took place on Monday evening in the City Hall, which was somewhat more than half filled.

On motion of T. D. McGee, Esq., M. P. P., Mr. Doherty, the President of the St. Patrick's Society, was called to the Chair. Mr. O. J. Devlin acted as Secretary.

The Chairman, having read the advertisement calling the meeting, said that such was the form of the invitation which had been extended to them, inviting them to join in an effort to relieve the distress of their countrymen at home.

He then after some introductory observations, called upon Mr. B. Devlin, who moved the following resolution:

Resolved, That the lamentable facts related in recent Irish journals, especially the provincial journals from the western counties of Ireland, the reports of local boards of Poor Law Guardians and Benches of Magistrates, and the verdicts of Coroner's Inquests, held in the towns of Athlone, Oughterard, Enniskillen, and elsewhere, have appealed, and do appeal, strongly, to all the fellow-subjects of the sufferers, and more especially to all their fellow-countrymen throughout the world, for such aid and relief as Providence may enable them to extend to their less fortunate brethren in Ireland.

Mr. Devlin, who was received with cheers, said: They were met to do honour to one of the Christian virtues—the virtue of Charity. A cry had come across the Atlantic which penetrated every Irish heart, causing them to be wrung with pain and anguish. Irishmen would prove their undying attachment to their native land by contributing out of their means to save their countrymen from the fatal famine.

Mr. P. Donavne seconded to resolution, which was carried unanimously.

It was then resolved that a subscription list should be immediately opened for to raise funds to provide relief to the sufferers; and a committee of gentlemen appointed to carry out the resolution of the meeting.

Mr. T. D. McGee, M. P. P., delivered a long and eloquent speech, taking for his text the following extracts from Irish papers, which he read:

MAYO.—The very Rev. Dean Darcan, in a letter to Sir Thomas Lascomb, Union Secretary for Ireland, dated Swinefort, Dec. 21st, writes:—"How does the case stand? Owing to the unprecedented inclemency of the season, the ordinary food of the people has been almost totally lost, not more than a third or fourth of the potato crop remaining, and even that fourth not really fit for human food, particularly when it is considered that it is the only article of food the poor have. It is not their fault that they are wholly depending on that very precarious esculent, so unfit to constitue the sole food of man. The evil is aggravated beyond conception, by the want of fuel, caused by the incessant rains of this year, which rendered it impossible to save turf."

FERMANAGH.—M. D. Nixon, Esquire, coroner, held an inquest on the body of Rebecca Liddy, who died in the streets of Enniskillen from want and exhaustion. A verdict was rendered according to the evidence.

GALWAY.—The Galway Press says that on Monday, the 23rd Dec., Mary Sullivan was found dead on the hearthstone of a poor cabin at Oughterard, where she sought refuge for the night—her body bent over the ashes of a few burnt sticks. An inquest was held on the remains, and a verdict of "death from exposure and want of food" returned.

The Galway Vindicator, speaking of the prevailing distress says:—That there is now a wide spread famine, no one will be found audacious enough to deny. From every part of the country the cry reaches us that a sad calamity has fallen upon our people. There is no gainsaying the fact. It is fearful to contemplate the sad ordeal that is before our poor people. If they had only to contend against the failure of the potato crop, their case would be melancholy enough, but the want of fuel adds considerably to their hardships."

The Galway Express adds to the above: "The destitution throughout the West and South-west of Ireland seems to be of the most melancholy description in every town and village. Want of employment, want of fuel, and want of food, have left the population entirely dependent on public sympathy."

WESTMEATH.—The suffering from scarcity of fuel amongst the poor inhabitants of Mullingar and its vicinity has attained a degree of intensity never before exceeded, turf being at this moment not to be had under three or four times its ordinary value, and even at this exorbitant price, is almost unfit for use.

YOUGHAL.—"Henry Barry, Esq., Coroner, Youghal, held an inquest on the body of John Kelly, on the 30th of November, who died from the want of clothing and food."

LIMERICK.—"The poor are starving, say, dropping dead, from positive want of food in Limerick. A letter which was received by the Chairman of the Board of Guardians, from the Rev. James O'Brien, P. P., St. Michael's, authenticates this melancholy fact."

ATHLONE.—"A case of distress of a most painful and affecting nature occurred in the streets of Athlone on the 5th ult.—Anthony Prendergast, having consumed the last meal of potatoes and burned the last fire he could place upon the hearthstone, with his wife and children, abandoned his wretched cabin and proceeded to the town to seek employment. The father carried one of the children on his back, the mother bore another folded in her arms, while the third child followed with bleeding feet and a trail of suffering which told of the pain and hunger he endured. They had scarcely entered the town when the exhausted mother complained that she felt a cold weight pressing on her heart, and taking aside the rags in which her child was rolled, she found it was his corpse. He had died in her arms of cold and hunger. It was only a spectacle of woe to see that emaciated, naked shivering group bewailing that little departed creature in the centre of a public street.—The local representatives of the commissioners for the relief of the poor were immediately appealed to, but they afforded no relief. Captains Desmond and Little, and one of the local priests contributed a few shillings, required for the burial of this first famine stricken victim and the temporary relief of this miserable family." (Great sensation.)

At the close of the meeting, the subscription amounted to $1000, a sum which has since been increased.

RELIGIOUS CHARACTER OF THE LATE PRINCE.

What was the religious character and influence of the Prince? His only from a very occasional remark that we can form any opinion as to the feeling of royal personages upon such subjects. But we think that the glimpse afforded us now and then by the Prince's conduct entitles us to say that he was sincerely a religious man. His choice of the motto on the facade of the Royal Exchange—"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof,"—of which it must be said, that of the whole world of books had been ransacked, none more fitting could have been found—seems to us to bespeak a thoroughly devout and serious mind. In a little work on Windsor, by the Reverend J. Stoughton, which is just about to make its appearance, mention is made of a beautifully executed statue from the studio of Baron Triquetti—a prominent and distinguished man, by the by, among the French Protestants, which stands at the top of the Queen's staircase, in the private apartments of the Castle. It represents the boy King, Edward VI., making with the sceptre a passage in the Bible which he holds in his left hand, as upon which he intently looks. A closer inspection discovers the text upon the page—"Josiah was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned thirty and one years in Jerusalem. And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in all the ways of David his father, and turned not aside to the right or to the left." This statue was executed by the desire of the late Prince Consort, who intended to convey to his son a constant and most significant suggestion of the Divine rule by which the future sovereign of England should fashion his mind and life. We know that the Queen ever held him up to her family as a model for their imitation in all things; and it cannot be doubted that his influence over the minds of his illustrious progeny was entirely for the good.—Patriot.

THE WEAPON OF DEATH.

A liquor dealer from, having put up some whisky in an enticing way for the market in bottles nicely labelled, with an unique device, sent a sample of their destructive decoration to the Chicago Tribune; upon which the "Great" discourseth as follows:—

"A whisky bottle mounted on a gun carriage, as a field piece, is the latest conceit of Finnigor the Great, who is welcome to the advertisement we shall give him. The design is an excellent one, and highly appropriate. Never cannon was unlimbered, or columbiad brought to bear, that has equalled Whiskey as a weapon of death.

Talk of your long ranged guns—three, four, or five miles. Why, Whisky once killed a brave young fellow on the Pacific coast, and the same shot went clear across the Continent and killed the sailor boy's mother in Maine. That's a range that will do to talk of.

We are in the midst of war and war preparations. An immense activity prevails in the invention and manufacture of the weapons of death. Rifle factories are busy, and huge forges groan as the columbiads take shape beneath the hammer. Yet not a weapon shall go forth in this war more destructive to the armies of the Government and Rebellion alike, than that which is before us in the similitude of a cannon, mounted upon a tiny truck—Whiskey.

CUT OFF THE BACK LEGS OF YOUR CHAIRS.

I will tell you a secret worth knowing. A thousand things not worth half as much have been patented and elevated into a business.

It is this. If you cut off the back legs of your chairs so that the back part of the seat shall be two inches lower than the front part, it will greatly relieve the fatigue of sitting, and keep your spine in much better shape.

The principal fatigue in sitting comes from your sliding forward, and thus straining the ligaments and muscles on the small of the back. The expedient I have advised obviates this tendency, and, as I have suggested, add greatly to the comfort and healthfulness of the sitting posture.

The front edge of the chair should not be more than fifteen inches high, for the average man, and more than fourteen for the average woman. The average chair is now seventeen inches for all, which is amount of slanting in the seat can make comfortable.—Dr. Dio Lewis.

THE LADY.—The aim of a real lady is always to be natural and unaffected, and to wear her talents, accomplishments, and her learning, as well as the newest and finest dresses, as if she did not know she had them about her.

The Cheapness of Newspapers.—A calculation made upon the contents of a Cincinnati paper resulted as follows:—"Six volumes of your paper contain about 16 millions. of

POSITION OF CANADIANS EXPLAINED.

(For the Cincinnati Gazette.)

Messrs. Editors:—It is often asked in the streets, and sometimes in the newspapers, "Why are Canadians so belligerent toward this country?" I will endeavor to answer the question. The people of Canada are not unfriendly to the people of the United States, and until very recently but few of them had any sympathy with the Confederate rebels or their unholy cause. But a majority of Canadians do mistrust Mr. Seward, and think he desires an opportunity to annex the Province, "by fair means or by foul," to the Union. They believe he manages the President and Cabinet. They know that on different occasions, in sundry public speeches, and at social boards where Canadians were present, he has "travelled from the records," sometimes to intimate and sometimes to declare openly, that the annexation of Canada to this Union, if not altogether un fait accompli, was a "manifest destiny" near at hand; and they remember that some of these declarations are hardly yet "bygones" in this "fast age." They unquestionably attach far too much importance to these declarations. Mr. Seward was doubtless indulging his remarkable gift of prophesy when he made them, as he has oftimes predicted the total abolition of Slavery on this Continent, and "done up" the rebellion in exactly "sixty days." The Canadians do not appreciate Mr. Seward's gift of prophesy, as we do, and therefore attach far too much importance to his playful predictions about their future. It is a way he has—a sort of ponderous humour—but they don't see the joke.

When "the foul, wicked and unnatural rebellion" was first inaugurated, it excited no Canadian sympathy, but on the contrary, the sympathy was with our national Government. The Toronto Leader raised a solitary yell in behalf of the rebels. This was to be expected, from its antecedents, but was the only Canadian journal that advocated the rendition of the coloured fugitive Anderson; and its Washington letters, published for months before the rebellion was set afoot, warmly advocated the Southern side of the national quarrel. They were written by the chief editor, a clever sort of political Dalgetty, who also contributed, I understand, to the editorial columns of Mr. Buchannan's "organ"—the Washington Constitution. Few moral constitutions possess vigour enough to overcome such an association, and it is no wonder that the Leader's editors "cared" before it.

The recognition of the Confederates as "belligerents" by England and France was promptly followed by a terrific explosion from our press, the fire being directed solely at England, and not divided between the offenders. The Albany Evening Journal, edited by Mr. Seward's aid and by his chief jugleman, Mr. Thurlow Weed, was particularly violent toward England, and then threatened to forcibly annex Canada. The New York World, another Cabinet organ, indulged in the same threatening strain, and there was hardly a journal in the country that did not threaten England, and impugn her motives, and hint at the conquest of Canada. The New York Herald, and some other "sensation journals," waxed eloquent in describing how anxious the Canadians were to join our "Happy Family," and seem yet to be labouring under this delusion.

I am not now discussing whether there was or was not cause for bitter disappointment and anger over the "belligerent" recognition, but am merely stating what followed it calculated to arrest the attention of Canadians and to "rile" them very considerably. I think the "belligerent recognition" was an immense political blunder on the part of British ministers, and shared in the disappointment it created here; but Canadians viewed it as a wise and just act, and were indignant at the explosion it provoked from our press. They are attached to England, have no desire whatever to sever "British connection," and if the bulk of them do not believe that Queen Victoria and her ministers are infallible, they do think them always right, or pretty nearly so—forgetting how very often they themselves have remonstrated against British measures likely to injuriously influence (in their opinion) the trade and prosperity of the colony. Their press commented a good deal upon the belligerent tone of our newspapers, and urged strict neutrality upon their readers. They remarked, too, that France escaped censure for doing exactly what England did, the only difference being in form—a difference that will obtain always in the public acts or declarations of representative or despotic Governments. The "Old Governor" "at home" had been "pitched into" promiscuously, and the urchin in the colony did not like it at all. Looking at the facts, which, perhaps, we too often overlook, is it a marvel that Canada in sympathy with our National Government "grew small by degrees and beautifully less!" The Toronto Globe and Montreal Herald, both very influential journals and enthusiastic in their sympathies for our National cause, remonstrated against the passionate tone of our newspapers, and warned us that its continuance would chill Canadian sympathy for the cause of the Union, and of law and order, and liberty; and were met with the sneer from New York city journals that Canada was of "no account anyhow," and would be conquered and annexed by and by, some fine morning before breakfast. This sort of treatment was not exactly calculated to increase Canadian sympathy, and it has changed many who were warmly friendly into indifferents, and made others hostile. Nor have the Confederates been idle in Canada. A few hundred of them are sojourning there, and their lying tricks are often to be seen in the press of the Canadian journals, their chief object being to prove that the South had a constitutional right to secede, and that with independance acknowledged she would have a large and mutually profitable trade with the British American colonies. The late conversion of our Government on the Slavery question, has also had its influence over many Canadians, and they say, "If this is a war to perpetuate Slavery, we don't care a button which whips." The more belligerent appreciate the great difficulties of the question, and claim that our Government is acting judiciously in regard to it, and that Slavery will never recover from this war, and will hereafter dwindle away; but this result is not visible to the masses, and, "in their haste," they denounce the whole war as a sham.

I should say that now the general sympathy of the Canadians was rather with the Confederates, not because of any real sympathy with the cause of their rebellion, but because the sharp newspaper attacks on England, the sneers at Canada, and threats to pin back its ears and swallow it bodily with "chip" before breakfast, have all combined to rouse the passions of our Canadian neighbors. They "feel their oats" considerably, and don't fancy being "mauled out," absorbed, annexed, or swallowed without ceremony; and they are proud of being British subjects. I am altogether mistaken, however, the vast majority of them are not hostile to those who, come what may, wish forever to their neighbors, and with whom they have had many years of pleasant and friendly intercourse; and I believe they would most cordially rejoice to see a perfectly "good understanding" restored; but they are not willing to join our partnership, and will unquestionably resist to the best of their ability any attempt to coerce them into it. They claim, and I believe truly claim, to be acting solely on the defensive in their preparatory measures, and are anxious that no serious misunderstanding should occur between England and this country; and if our high-pressure journals will say less about conquering Canada or "wiping it out" by and by, the supposed hostile tone of Canadians will be speedily followed by a friendly expression that cannot be mistaken.

THE SOUTHERN POSITION.

(From the Sixty-day American Journal.)

It is not often that we are permitted to see the position of the South as depicted by her own newspapers. But whenever of late favored by a perusal of the leading Confederate organs we find them full of complaint and dissatisfaction at the progress, or rather want of progress of the Southern leaders to render the Confederacy an accomplished fact. The same frauds and peculations, too, which are perpetrated in the Federal army contracts are also characteristic of the Southern contractors; and, while the South claims for those engaged in her struggle a greater amount of bravery and disinterestedness than can be found among those whom the Richmond papers designate as "Yankee mercenaries," there is just as much cheating in the South as in the North. The principal feature, however, is the loud and reiterated complaint of the Confederate journals at the lack of energy shown in achieving the independence of the South. For instance, the Richmond Examiner, of the 16th instant, charges that the campaign was strictly defensive;" and that the South has "gained nothing, for we have attempted nothing." This defensive policy has, according to the Examiner, given the Federal army an uninterrupted opportunity to prepare a gigantic host and to arrange it at leisure for the full trial of relative strength when the season permits the resumption of hostilities. The following is a far worse complaint by the Examiner:—"While the political leaders of the South have been reposing in dreams of approaching peace, and while our accomplished captains of engineers have been expending their remarkable scientific ingenuity in the erection of works as wonderful, and almost as extensive and quite as valuable, as the Chinese wall, to resist invading forces from a given direction, the enemy have gradually and at leisure gathered up their tremendous resources and concentrated their tremendous energies to envelope the Confederacy with their armies and fleets, and to penetrate the interior from some one of many alternative points. Although they can now do nothing, they have their general programme in perfect order for execution when the weather changes in the ordinary course of the earth round the sun; and at this moment we find ourselves in the face of superior forces wherever we look, whether to the North, the East or the West, or the South itself." Again:—"General Sydney Johnston has to strain every nerve to prevent the military as well as geographical heart of the country, from slipping out of his grasp. Generals Joe Johnston and Beauregard are held by McClellan on the Potomac as in a vice. A gigantic armament is ready to attempt the descent of the Mississippi, and their efforts on the Atlantic sea-coast and the Gulf are too freshly before the public attention to require remembrance. Such are the fruits of a policy purely defensive."

This is, indeed, a sad confession of weakness from the proud and high-minded South. Hitherto the Confederates have shown themselves to be brave, full of resources, devoted to their cause, and nobly battling with difficulties of which the North has known nothing; and these various qualities in such a degree as to command the respect of every disinterested man throughout the world. But, after all, it is, perhaps, nothing very extraordinary. In the North, we have complaints just as bitter against the inaction of the Federal troops. The wretched politicians of the country are as unreasonable and dishonest at the North as at the South, and it would take a Solomon to decide the question between them. In the present case the extremes meet; and when extremes meet we know that wisdom ceases to be a quality common to either side.

But the Southern press does not confine itself to complaints of inaction on the Southern armies. The New Orleans Bulletin has an article of a most serious character. It asks in language as significating as it is indicative of helplessness that the Northern blockade be broken—broken too by Southern men-of-war, as it is utterly hopeless to put any trust in foreign Powers to help the Confederates. On this point, the Bulletin says:—"Yet the question again and again comes back—will France or England, or both combined, really and practically raise the blockade? There is no reason, as we look at the business, why they should not. And this has been the truth for more than six months past; yet the blockade has remained, and the great port of New Orleans has been hermetically sealed to the commerce of the world all that time, and may continue so for six months longer unless we ourselves break the seal. There is the pinching point. Shall we permit the port to remain closed six months longer without making a bold, vigorous—aye, a desperate effort to open it?"

We can easily appreciate the state of facts which have suggested this forlorn hope—to break the blockade. New Orleans is the N.Y. or Liverpool of the South; and a blockade of that port must be absolute ruin not only to Louisiana, but the several States lying contiguous to it—in fact, to the whole commerce of the South, seeing that there is not a single outlet for a trade hitherto so flourishing. Indeed it is almost miraculous how the Southern States have managed to exist during the last nine months, seeing that they have been solely dependent upon their own internal resources. We opine, however, that any attempt on the part of the Confederates to break the blockade must prove utterly fruitless. Where are the ships to do this? Build them at once says the Bulletin. Too late—too late. Already the North begins to move from a hundred points by land and sea. The ball has been opened in Kentucky, where a most important Union victory has been achieved. The politicians north or South will not have long to wait.

The deceased, when the accident occurred, was coming from Paris to Brantford on the limited train.—Advertiser.

DEATH OF EX-PRESIDENT JOHN TYLER.

(From the New York Tribune.)

John Tyler is dead at Richmond, Va., aged 72. He was born in Charles County, Va., in 1790, and elected to the Legislature of that State when 25 years old. The next year he was chosen to Congress (House), and served through three terms with no particular distinction. A few years later he was chosen Governor of his State by the Legislature, and in 1827 was elected to the United States Senate—all the Adams combining with a minority of the Jackson men in his support, in order to oust John Randolph, whose unmeasured vituperation of Adams and Clay made their friends willing to unite on any one who could beat him.—In December 1839, Mr. Tyler appeared as a delegate in the Whig National Convention held at Harrisburg, where he figured as a zealous and an uncompromising advocate of Mr Clay's nomination for the Presidency. He was reported to have shed tears when General Harrison received the nomination. He dried them, however, on receiving the nomination for the second office, whereby the support of the "White" men of 1836 was conciliated, and the votes of Tennessee, Georgia, North Carolina, Mississippi, &c. secured to General Harrison. Virginia was still carried for Van Buren, and did not vote for Mr. Tyler, who was nevertheless elected by an overwhelming Electoral majority. General Harrison was inaugurated March 4, 1841, and died thirty days thereafter, leaving the Presidency to Mr. Tyler.—How false he proved to those who had elected him, and how contemptible he rendered himself, even in the eyes of those who profited by his treachery, we need not here set forth. Mr. Tyler was a man of uncommanding presence, but of courtly, winning manners. He was tall and thin in person, deferential and pleasing in address, emptyminded and hollow-hearted. By choosing first Judge Upshur, then John C. Calhoun, as his Secretary of State, he secured the annexation of Texas, and commenced the long train of Slavery aggressions which are beginning to bear fruit.

THE CANADIAN OIL WELLS.

The following letter appears in the Detroit Advertiser:

Enniskillen, Canada West, situate about sixteen miles from the St. Clair River, and nearly opposite Newport, is probably one of the richest oil districts in the world. There are now sunk and in progress, about three hundred wells, most of them rich and yielding largely. Two days ago a flowing well was struck, equal to any of those marvellous wells in Pennsylvania—by actual test it throws out about two barrels a minute. So far, they have not been able to stop its flow, and of course one of the oil is running into the Creek. This well and the larger portion of the wells are situate on Black Creek—there is another group of valuable wells situate on Bear Creek about seven miles distant. This wonderful producing region of an article of prime necessity, which is destined to be shipped the world over, is within a few hours' travel of Detroit men or Detroit capital here. Why is this? I can only account for it on the supposition that the attention of her business men has not been called to it. Although a large number of men are engaged in the oil region, there is evidently a lack of capital sufficient to take care of the oil and to move it to market.

The production here and in the United States, combined, has outstripped the home demand, and some of the German States have been already opened successfully, and with a fair prospect that the demand will equal any surplus we will have to spare them. To ship this cheaply, it must be put aboard vessels in the St. Clair River, direct for foreign ports. To do this requires vessels and capital enough to freight them. Detroit has both vessels and capital, and I know of no business that offers to be more remunerative, except it be to buy land and sink wells that shall flow rivers of oil. The real oil district is comparatively limited—still there are good sites for sale for money, as money is now what is needed in Enniskillen.

Oil is produced cheaper here than in Pennsylvania—the flowing well is only about two hundred feet deep. The flowing wells of Pennsylvania are generally over six hundred feet. The oil from this well stands at about forty-three in the standard of highest value, as understood here. The odour of the Canada oil is stronger and more pungent than of the Pennsylvania. This has been made an objection to the Canada oil; and, doubtless, to some extent, will continue to be an objection, although practically, it is but of little account. Our refineries find no difficulty in deodorizing it, and when done, it is better oil than comes from Pennsylvania. It has a better body, gives a stronger light, and will last longer—three very important considerations to the consumer.

The route to these wells at this season, from Detroit, is: by Grand Trunk Railway to Sarnia; by Great Western Railway to Wyoming, sixteen miles; by sleigh to Bear Creek Wells, five miles; to Black Creek, twelve miles—splendid road.

A FREAK OF FORTUNE.

Enniskillen Oil!—Such cases as the following are like angels' visits, "few and far between." A Mr. Shaw, like many others, some time ago left his slow money-making business, determined to make his fortune, "seeking Enniskillen Oil." For months he toiled; and, hoping against hope, persevered till he had bored the rock over one hundred feet, still no signs of fortune, but still he persevered: 130 was reached without promise, funds are now exhausted, clothing wore out; 140 is reached with prospects as dark as the hole where the fortune was expected; 150 feet is reached, and Mr. Shaw has lost his all, credit is refused for even half a pound of tea to cheer the drooping spirits. Mr. Shaw is now out of money, out of means, out of clothing, out of credit, and in debt, with a hole 150 feet in the rock, but no oil. In spits of all he bores on, and on Thursday last his perseverance is rewarded. When he reaches 156 feet, such a stream of genuine oil as had never been witnessed burst from those lower regions of the earth, and his well, about forty feet deep above the rock is filled in about two hours and a half, and a stream of the best oil that has yet been discovered flowed from the top, sufficient, according to some estimates, to fill 1500 barrels per day, by others 2,000. Mr. Shaw's neighbors were now very willing to assist him in securing the wasting oil; but although several hands were thus employed, no visible impression was made on the wasting stream, and it was said by those that saw it that they might as well try to drink up the Bear Creek. This is evidently the masterpiece of all oil operations, and apart from the romance that attaches to its discovery, it will form an episode in the history of mining, manufacturing, and commerce of South Oil. Mr. Shaw is now a rich man, and consequently has any amount of credit, and every body calls him Mr Shaw.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 30TH, 1862.

THE MEETING OF PARLIAMENT.

We shall soon have our collected wisdom assembled at Quebec, for the purpose of making laws to govern us. If our laws are not to our liking we have ourselves to blame. We choose the men who make them and so we are responsible for the laws so made.—As yet we have had no foreshadowings of the measures intended to be submitted by the administration. It may be they anticipate a reconstruction and are therefore anxious to have that transpire first. A Bankrupt Bill was introduced last session and possibly it will be one measure before the House. A good bill is much needed and will tend to benefit the country. There are many unfortunate men in the community who are unable to meet their engagements, whose every possible asset has gone to his creditors, and he can do no more. As the law is at present such an individual can not move or do anything to better his condition, and of course his creditors get nothing and expect nothing. Whereas, were the law so made, as is intended, the debtor might again pursue business and with the warning before him of former mishaps he might avoid being again shipwrecked, and in the course of time be enabled to repay his indebtedness. Such a bill will be hailed by such individuals with delight.

It has been usual for several sessions past for the Temperance men to petition Parliament for assistance in suppressing intemperance. These efforts have produced three measures from Parliament,—not such measures however as have been prayed for. The petitioners have asked the Legislature to prohibit entirely the traffic in intoxicating liquors by declaring it illegal. They have however given to municipalities the power, if they think fit, to prohibit the retailing of such liquors within their bounds. They have also enacted that in all municipalities but one tavern shall exist for every 250 souls of the inhabitants thereof. This measure has been hailed by the friends of temperance as a step in advance. As far as our experience however, goes, we are not satisfied that it is a step in advance. We have certainly fewer licensed taverns in our good town than formerly, but we are of opinion that we have as many unlicensed groggeries as are licensed. During the year five persons have been fined for selling liquors without license, and five more have been tried but escaped for want of direct evidence. The present law makes it lawful for one man in 250 souls to sell intoxicating liquors. If these 250 souls desire to use these liquors the one man can furnish them as well as three, consequently we do not see much advantage from the law, save that it tends to create a monopoly. It is a question whether there is less drinking in Peterborough now with its fifteen taverns than there was with its thirty. There certainly never was a year that more cases have been before the Police Court for drunkenness than the present year. There is also the Sunday Liquor Law, prohibiting the sale of liquors from 7 o'clock on Saturday night till 8 o'clock on Monday morning. This has been and still is a dead letter in this Town, only two individuals having ever been brought up, and yet the law is openly violated by every liquor seller in Town. There is also a section of the Election law prohibiting the sale or giving of liquors during the two days of the election, when taverns are ordered to be closed under a penalty. These laws are disregarded and their continuance on the Statute book is an evil.—They will not be enforced by the drinking portion of the community, and the Temperance portion do not think it worth their while to assist in their observance. In our humble opinion all that has yet been obtained from the Legislature or all that can at present be obtained from it is of very questionable utility in advancing the Temperance Reformation. So long as Parliament for a pecuniary consideration pronounces the traffic as legal, so long may we expect that traffic will be continued and patronised, unless the Temperance millenium interpose.

At the present time the traffic is too good a source of revenue to think of prescribing it, and the love of intoxicating liquors is too general to contemplate their prohibition, hence the difficulties in the way of obtaining a Prohibitory Law. It has been a favorite topic with the Temperance organisations to attempt the passage of such a law. We seem further from it now than ever. The drinking usages of the times are fast spreading, overwhelming apparently all the efforts put forth to oppose them. No wonder that the friends of the Temperance reform get discouraged at the strides making to inundate the land with strong drinks. We are fast drifting to where we were 30 years ago, and our hearts die within us to contemplate the temporal and eternal evils following in the train of spirit drinking. The quarrels in neighborhoods and families, the ruin of health and circumstances, the fearful crimes attending excessive drinking, the ruin of character, and the loss of friends, and above all the loss of the soul. Never there were a time when the Temperance men were required to work it is now.

Avoid the foolish task of asking your legislators for assistance, look to your own abilities, put them forth. Labour to persuade your child, friend, and neighbour to cease using intoxicating drinks; take them by the hand and show them the pleasures of abstinence. Use the peaceful, the only legitimate and successful weapon of moral suasion, and follow up those efforts by the powerful influence of a consistent Temperance walk and conversation. Then may we expect to see the triumphs manifested in by-gone days, of individuals voluntarily coming forward resolved to do themselves no harm, and in uniting with others in the great work of stamping up the evil cause of intemperance in the land.

ROYAL ADELPHI DRAMATIC TROUPE.

This talented Company have been performing in the Town Hall during the past week, to large audiences. Miss Mollie Williams is a "star" of no ordinary magnitude. Mr and Mrs Stetson stand high in their profession; and for low-comedy Mr. Sheldon has probably few superiors on the stage of this country. The Royal Adelphi are decidedly the most talented troupe of Artists travelling.

To-night the favorite play of "Rob Roy" will be performed, to be followed by the "screaming farce, of A Dead Shot."

☞ We are happy to state that a meeting will be held by the Peterboro Temperance Reformation Society, in about two weeks. Rev. Jonathan Shortt of Port Hope has been invited, and is expected to be present.

FIELD BATTERY NOTICE.

We would remind the members of the Volunteer Field Battery of the meeting to be held on Saturday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, in the Town Hall. It is of importance that as many as possible should attend. The Company is nearly full, and is made up of as fine a body of men as can be found in any Volunteer Company, perhaps, in the Province. It is necessary, therefore, that good officers be chosen, men who will be an honor to the Company, and who in their turn will deem it a high honor to command.

THE LEADER'S BETTING RENEWED.

Contrary to all expectations this disputed point of circulation is renewed by the Leader within a few days; its silly wagers reproduced—and for what pray? We guess that it finds its boast of having the "largest circulation of any journal in the Province" is not correct. That it dare not state its numbers, as did the Globe, and consequently the ruse of the $36,000 challenge is considered the best and readiest way of saving its bacon. It has found its way into the standing advertisements and is likely to remain there for some time. If the party who concocted the "brilliant scheme" imagines he can blind reflecting men with so silly an attempt to deceive, he must be a simpleton indeed. Like a bar-room braggart he will bet and wager all sorts of sums when he is aware no one will take him up.

We must here notice in the new challenge it is prefaced with a notice that there is no "bet no gambling." If the terms of forfeiting sums of money proposed by the Leader is not betting we know not what is. A dispute between two persons arose a few days ago as to which paper had the largest circulation in Peterboro through the Post Office, and each agreed to forfeit a dollar if the paper he named had not the largest circulation. The parties themselves called this betting, and in common parlance every one save the Leader calls it betting too. We go further and we maintain that the "forfeits" proposed by the Leader are both betting and gambling, and it will require more ingenuity on its part than it has yet manifested to prove them otherwise.

Mr Brown in declining the bets we are told "answered by a shower of personal abuse." We have read Mr. Brown's reply and we discovered no personal abuse whatever. He stated he had not $36,000 to stake in any such way, and that if Mr. Beaty had such a sum at command, he would do better to pay it to the Government as interest long over due on the principal he owes for the York Roads.

The proprietor of the Leader should not evince so much tenderness when allusion is made to the York Road swindle. It is notorious that he is a defaulter, and his swells about betting large stakes will remind the people of his large indebtedness which ought to have been paid long ago, but which was never enforced by the corrupt administration now in power. One fact is patent by the stir about circulation, and that is, with government patronage and pap, and the desperate efforts made to extend its circulation, the Leader cannot reach that of the Globe. In fact, we are not sure but that it is behind the Montreal Witness. It seems as much "afraid of the figures" as it is fond of its bets, and there is nothing before the public to the contrary. We want the Leader's numbers so as to know whether it stands 2nd, 3rd, or 4th. Its celebrated challenge will be a standing memorial of its weakness and cowardice.

THE MONTREAL WITNESS.

This excellent journal pursues the even tenor of its way amidst good report and bad. It is published semi-weekly at $2 a-year,—certainly one of cheapest, as it is one of the best, papers published in the Province.

"No family should be without so cheap and so valuable a means of mental improvement. Its excellent selections, and notices of passing events, together with its valuable and reliable commercial intelligence, have earned for it from all the character of a good paper.

We say to all our friends take the Montreal Witness. The $2 paid for it is one of the very best investments you can make, for profit or pleasure. It is a good time to commence, and when you begin you will be loath to give it up.

DRILL.—We are requested to announce that Capt. Lince will meet with the members of the Field Battery for drill (infantry) in the large room over the Bank of Toronto, on Monday and Wednesday evenings, until further notice.

In amendment it was moved by Mr. Hodgson, seconded by Mr. Dick,—That P. McHugh, Esq., Reeve of Ops, be Warden for the current year.

Mr. Dean was elected.

☞ The order for drafting 75 men from each battalion of the Militia is, we understand, countermanded for the present.—Guardian.

☞ William White, Esq., of the 7th Concession, West Whitby, a respectable farmer, and Councillor elect, committed suicide on Saturday last, by hanging himself in an outbuilding. When discovered life was extinct. The act is supposed to have been induced by embarrassed circumstances.

☞ According to the Richmond Examiner, merchandise of all kinds is growing higher in that city. There is absolutely no coffee for sale there or in Petersburg. Fine Liverpool salt commands $15 and $20 per sack. Sugar, too, is rapidly increasing in price. The army is entirely without salt.

☞ Recent popular English works have had great sale. Murray announces that "Livingstone's Travels" sold 35,000 copies; the "Life of Paxton," 18,000; the "Life of Stephens," 20,000; "Self Help," 40,000; Layard's "Nineveh," 30,000; and the "Life of Crabbe," 18,000.

☞ The London papers announce that Mark Lemon, the manager of Punch, is about to appear in a new character. He is to give an entertainment "About London," with models and maps. The entertainment is to be divided into three sections; "Old London City without the Walls," "Old London City within the Walls," and "London to Westminster"

☞ Mr. Cohen, says a correspondent of the Cincinnati Times, has addressed a letter to General Scott, "in which he expresses the opinion that, unless the rebellion shall be crushed before the first of April next, England will be under the necessity (impelled by the popular clamor of her commercial and manufacturing interests) of opening the cotton ports of the South."

☞ The undermentioned rewards for saving life at sea, have recently been awarded by the British Government and the London Board of Trade:—To Captain Otis Baker, of ship "Thatcher Magoun," of Boston, a sextant; to Capt. Silas Mariner, of the bark "Brothers," of New York, a telescope; to Wm. De Forrest Bowers, chief mate of the ship "Bostonese," a telescope; to John Campbell, and John Thompson, seamen of said ship, the sum of £2 10s. each; and to Captain James Bowen, of the American schooner "Maryland," a telescope.

☞ Another fire took place in Cobourg last Friday, resulting in the destruction of Mr P. Regan's Livery Stables, together with almost their entire contents. There were nine horses in the stable at the time, six of which he succeeded in taking out, but the remaining three, the most valuable horses he had, were burned with the building. His loss is very severe, and embraces, together with the three horses above mentioned, his entire outfit of harness, save a few single sets and all his stock of feed, which consisted of one hundred bushels of oats, two tons of shorts, and between two and three tons of hay. His loss is estimated at $1,500. No insurance.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

A REPLY.

DEAR SIR,—In the last issue of the Examiner I observe a reply by "E" to an article of mine on "A Lawful Government." With not a few of the sentiments contained in E.'s communication I am agreed, but I cannot agree with E. when he attempts to prove from Romans xiii. 1, &c., subjection and obedience to all Governments, on the part of Christians. I will endeavor to disprove from the Bible alone the Scripturality of this his principal position, passing over without reply his observations on my "early prejudices, possibly imbibed through 'Confessions of faith'" &c. I do not insinuate that E. is the friend and advocate of the doctrine that non-resistance to tyrants is a duty binding on Christians; still it cannot be denied that his interpretation of Romans xiii. 1, has in all ages been adopted by tyrants when endeavoring to impress on their "subjects" the duty of non-resistance to their acts of misrule. Magistracy is an ordinance of God, and what constitutes "a lawful government" is thus set forth in the Bible, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers; for there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God. Whoever resisteth the power resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation." This terrible denunciation has its application here, and here only, because it is God's moral institution—the power ordained by the Creator upon the righteous principle of his eternal rule—"Holiness becometh" his institution "forever." The nature of the power here intended is determined by the character given of the ruler. "For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Do that which is good and thou shalt have praise of the same. For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid, for he beareth not the sword in vain. For he is the minister of God, a revenger, to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." In what terms could we better describe the moral ordinance of God than it is described in the terms of this passage? The ruler is the minister or servant of God for good; to reward those that do good and to punish those that do evil;"—in one word the guardian and the executor of the divine law. To a Government that punishes the evil doer, and is the rewarder of him that doeth good we must needs "be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake."—Here is the application of the instruction to Titus: "Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey Magistrates, to be ready to every good work."—If it is command, Mr. Editor, is unlimited, embracing all principalities and powers, then it enjoins obedience to Satan, and the evil powers under his control. But we are commanded to "wrestle against these principalities and powers." It is limited, therefore, and the limitation must be regulated by God's moral ordinance, the ordinance of God to men for good, that we may be "ready to every good work."—Morality reigns throughout the whole.

But reverse the description, Mr. Editor. Injustice and perverse judgment are the habitation of the Throne. The ruler is a terror to good works, and a praise to them that do evil; executing wrath upon him that doeth good, attending continually upon this very thing.

In illustration of the above I here quote a passage from the late Dr. McLeod's Lectures on the Revelation; Dr. McL. was a pious and learned minister of the Old School R. P. Church. I quote from a copy in my possession issued in Greenock, Scotland, in 1850. The doctor says, "Plain Christians are deceived by a plain sophism. The sophism is this: 'There is no power but of God, therefore this power is from Heaven, and to it you must submit, as unto the ordinance of God.' This argument will suit every case, and it has been universally resorted to by the friends of passive obedience. It has always been the refuge of those who plead the divine right of Kings, and Popes, and Emperors, over their unhappy subjects. It applies to all power, good or bad. It avails Beelzebub, the prince, as well as any of his servants or instruments. 'Satan is powerful; there is no power but of God; therefore, it is wrong to resist the adversary.' This sophism is easy of solution. There are distinct kinds of power; one is authorised of God, and is moral; the other is permitted of God, and is immoral. There are distinct kinds of obedience; one is the result of allegiance, and is voluntary; the other the, consequences of force, and is compulsory. A man must shut his eyes not to see the distinction."

I ask "E." did a Nero act as the minister of God when he illuminated the streets of Rome with the blazing bodies of the primitive Christians? Did a Charles II represent the divine majesty, when he commissioned a Dalziel and a Claverhouse to pursue the worthies of the olden time, who feared his name and reverenced their creator's prerogatives above Kings, through the glens and mountains of Scotland, with "fire-brands, arrows and death!" If such cruel tyrants are the ordinance of God, then the saints whom they butchered without mercy were the most abandoned of men—the worst of "evil doers," in thus resisting the ordinance of God.

That every person living within the geographical boundaries of a nation is under moral obligation to identify himself with it and maintain as God's moral ordinance, is a dogma very generally believed. The multitude mostly advocate passive obedience and non-resistance. So popular are the powers that be, in many countries, that the man who doubts their authority, or calls in question their claims to his conscientious obedience, is in danger of losing caste, and of being pointed at by the crowd as being a narrow-minded bigot, incapable of appreciating the light of the 19th century.—There is, however, Mr. Editor, certain kind of immorality in civil governments which is seen, and calls forth the expressions of most men in entire disregard of their professions of loyalty, and to which they are quite sensitive. Let a government invade their personal rights—let it exact unjust and exhorbitant taxes, bow quickly are their principles changed. But if it lets only cast off the authority of the God of nations, and disregarded his law in framing its constitution, and in conducting its administration, and if its wrongs are only inflicted upon poor Africans by degrading them to the condition of the beasts that perish; then, O! then all that is a small matter; the government must be approved and sustained, and as the "ordinance of God" challenge (their) obedience and prayers.

Mr. Editor, having thus stated my views as to what constitutes a Government, God's ordinance, I now finish this letter, leaving it to "E." to answer me or not, just as he thinks proper. I recommend to him the perusal of McLeod's Lectures; the Hind let loose, and Napthalis. The style of the two last is antiquated; being that of the 17th century. They have never been answered, and very probably never will.

In conclusion, Mr. Editor, if E.'s in-

THE LUMBER TRADE OF ALBANY.

REVIEW OF THE TRADE FOR 1861.

(From the Albany Evening Journal.)

The Lumber Trade of Albany during the year 1861 partook of the depression of all kinds of business not connected with army supplies or foreign demand. In the spring sales were made at fair prices; but when the mammoth dimensions of the rebellion were realized in the summer, the amount of building was sensibly decreased, the demand was light, and prices fell below cost of production on many kinds of Lumber. Small quantities were sold for the ordinary wants of the country; but the principal demand was for foreign ports, stimulated by low prices. Thus sustained the market and enabled dealers to sell down very close, the comparatively small receipts of the season, leaving the stock on hand less than for many years.

The supply for 1862 will be light, as our accounts from the manufacturing district, show that but few logs are being cut this winter, and, as a general thing, the Lumber on hand at the mills is small. The anticipated demand for the coming year is also small, as our own country will want but little, and it is generally thought that the foreign trade was over done last year, and the markets must be fully supplied.

Under these circumstances, prices will not materially advance, and prudent operators will be careful how they reduce their standing timber, when remunerative rates cannot be obtained for the manufactured article.

The receipts of Lumber for 1861 were down 138,000,000 feet less than in the previous year, but Shingles, Square Timber and Staves are about the same.

The following table exhibits the receipts at Albany during the years named:—

The U.S. gunboat Tuscarora had arrived at Southampton to watch the Nashville, which was there ready for sea.

The vessels destroyed by the Sumpter were the ship Vigilant, bark Ellen Dodge, and the schooner Arcadia.

There was considerable disappointment expressed in England at the non-reception of definite advice from America in reference to the Mason and Slidell embroglio; and the greatest anxiety was felt for the news by the next arrival.

The privateer Sumpter had arrived at Cadiz, where she landed 42 prisoners, taken from merchant vessels which she destroyed.

Queenstown, Thursday.

The rendition of Mason and Slidell to the custody of Lord Lyons was received with the greatest satisfaction, but some journals complain of the ungracious manner in which the Washington Cabinet proceeded. Others accord due credit for the act and the graceful manner with which the settlement was conducted.

The steamship Europa, from Boston, arrived at Liverpool on the 6th.

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.—Breadstuffs generally had declining tendency, except for corn, which ruled firm and slightly upward. Flour reported dull at 29s a 30s per bbl. Wheat very dull; red Western and Southern 11s 6d a 12s 3d; white, Western, and Southern, 12s a 13 6d. Corn firmer and holders demand an advance; mixed 32s a 32s 6d. Pork unchanged in price and quiet. Lard has downward tendency. Sugar firm. Ashes quiet; pots 30s 6d; pearls 36s.

London, Jan. 8th.—Breadstuffs dull and slightly declined. Sugar quiet. Tea steady. Consols closed on Tuesday at 92¼ a 92⅜ for money.

THE LATEST.

Liverpool Markets.—Market quiet and steady for breadstuffs.

London, Thursday.—Consols have advanced to 93¼ for money. The Bank of England has reduced its rate of discount to 2½ per cent.

The Paris Patrie and Pays say that the Washington Government offered to restore Mason and Slidell on conditions that England would not recognise the Southern Confederacy.

The London Morning Herald says: now the Mason and Slidell affair is settled, England and France have an inducement on commercial grounds to recognise the well-earned independence of the Southern Confederacy, and that unless the step is manfully taken by Ministers at once, it is certain to be taken by Parliament on its assembling.

Additional batteries of artillery were under orders to embark.

The London Times shows that by the first of February the squadron of Admiral Milne will number seventeen of battle ships, 33 frigates, 25 corvettes, and sloops of war, and speculates on what he can do therewith.

The shipments of ammunition to the Atlantic squadron continues unabated.

The Sumpter, on arriving off Cadiz with the officers and crews of three Federal merchant vessels, solicited permission to enter the port. The American Consul demanded that the request should be refused, but it was granted on condition that the prisoners should be placed under the protection of Spain, and the Sumpter then entered the port.

It was rumored that the American Consul would leave on account of the action of Spain.

The British Parliament is summoned to assemble on the 6th of February, but can be called earlier if the exigencies of the case should demand it.

The continental news is unimportant.

The Paris bourse was firm and higher, rentes being quoted at 67f 90c.

A violent earthquake had occurred in Greece.

Canton, 30th.—A coup d'etat has taken place at Pekin. The Cabinet have been imprisoned and a new Ministry formed under Prince Kung.

Melbourne, Nov. 15.—the shipments of gold since last mail amount to one hundred and forty-s no thousand ounces.

ARRIVAL OF THE "EUROPA."

Halifax, Jan. 26.

The steamship Europa from Liverpool on the 11th at 3 p.m., and Queenstown on the 12th, arrived at 10.30 last night. The Europa has 16 passengers and £8,500 for Boston and £8,400 for Halifax. The wind was then and is still blowing a hurricane with a heavy sea. The Europa has neither troops nor stores, the Government having discontinued shipments by the Cunarders.

It was reported that notwithstanding the pacific relations of the American question, warlike preparations at Woolwich have not been relaxed.

The Sparta and Ajax continued to take on heavy stores for Halifax.

No official notice had yet been given at Portsmouth respecting any discharges of flood mechanics or labourers, but it was understood that reductions takes place in April.

A Cabinet Council was commenced for the 16th; but had been countermanded.—Mr. Seward's dispatch having been considered in a Council held on the 9th.

The Times understands that no more will be returned, expressing gratification at the dismissal of Com. Wilkes' act, excepting the satisfaction rendered, and assuming that the precedent in the Trent case will suit the case of the schooner Eugene Smith. As to the general discussion of the law of nations the Government will decline any answer until they have had an opportunity of submitting the whole note to their law officers. There are propositions in the note which are not at all acceptable, and after the delivery of the prisoners these points may be properly raised and discussed.

The Saturday Post says the Cabinet is thoroughly understanding, and have arrived at with the American Government. Not only had they given the required reparation, but in doing so, Mr. Seward will have succeeded in impressing on the English Government the notion that they have not only present indemnity but also no small pledge of future security.

The Times says that rumour fixes England's expenses, owing to the late difficulty, at £2,000,000; but the Times expects when all the bills are in it will be double that sum, and that the money has not been thrown away.

The Times has a strong editorial on the reception due to Mason and Slidell, and says they are about the most worthless booty it would be possible to extract from the jaws of the American lion, having been long known as habitual haters and revilers of England. The Times seriously hopes that the English people will not give them follows anything in the shape of an ovation. The civility to a foe in distress is all they can claim. England has returned them good for evil, and even now, if they can they will be only too willing to entangle her in a war with the North. England would have done just as much to rescue two negros.—Let Mason and Slidell, therefore pass quietly on their way and have their say with any one who may listen to them.

The other journals advise a similar course and allude to Mason's strong advocacy of the fugitive slave law, to prejudice the public against him.

The Times reiterates its denunciation of the attempt blockade of Charleston harbor, and says, among the crimes which have disgraced the history of all mankind, it would be difficult to find one more atrocious than this. Even the fierce tribes of the desert will not destroy the well which supplies the enemy. The Times protests in the strong est terms against such proceedings, and asserts that no belligerent has a right to resort to such a warfa e.

Great interest had been excited relative to the movements of the Tuscarora and the Nashville. At the latest dates they continued at Southampton watching each other. The Tuscarora remained at her anchorage anout a mile from the dock's mouth with her fires banked up and ready to ship her anchor and start at a moment's notice. She only required coal, water and provisions, which were being supplied her. On her arrival Capt. Craven communicated with the Captain of the frigate Dauntless, expressing regret at Prince Albert's death, and asking if he might fire as a tribute of respect, 21 minute guns. He was notified that the Queen had requested that no guns be fired in the vicinity of Osborne. The compliment therefore, although fully appreciated, could not be accepted.

The Nashville continued in dock. The Government had observed the strictest neutrality towards her and nothing whatever has been permitted to be done to her but what was absolutely necessary to make her seaworthy. Neither powder, guns, nor munitions of war had been put on board.

During the night of the 9th three armed men from the Tuscarora were discovered reconnoitering the Nashville, and were ordered off by the dock superintendent.

Fires were lighted on the Nashville on the 10th, and there was an impression that she was going to sail, but she made no movement.

The Tuscarora was on the alert with steam up.

The Sumter was reported to have left Cadiz for Southampton.

It was also reported that another Federal vessel was cruising in the channel and might be expected at Southampton.

The Morning Herald is surprised that the Government has not given orders to the authorities, at Southampton, to warn the Tuscarora that she must either quit port at once or wait until twenty-four hours after the departure of the Nashville. We should not, says the Herald, have allowed the Nashville to lie in wait, at the mouth of the Mersey, for American packets or merchantmen, therefore we cannot, without a gross violation of our duty as neutrals, allow the Tuscarora a license we should have refused her enemy.

McLaren, mate of the American ship Ganges, had been committed for trial in London for murdering one of his crew at sea.

The London money market on the 10th ope ed firm, but towards the close showed some slight reaction.

Consols closed at ¼ decline, attributed solely to realizations after the advance.—The market on the 11th was dull but steady.

Since the reduction of the bank minimum on Thursday to 2½ per cent. money has been pretty plentiful in the open market at 2¼ per cent for the best bills, and was offered on the stock exchange at 1 per cent.

There had been a considerable advance in saltpeter under the idea that the export prohibition would soon be removed.

ITALY.

The majority of the Chamber of Deputies had unanimously resolved to continue to support Ricasoli's Government.

GERMANY.

A violent shock of an earthquake was felt at Dresden on the 9th. It extended as far as Leipsic. No damage is reported.

HOLLAND.

The Ministry had tendered their resignations.

RUSSIA.

It is said that Russia had sent an embarrassing ultimatum to Rome, to the effect that if the Pope does not conform the conduct of the Polish clergy, Russia will recognise the Kingdom of Italy.

FRANCE.—The speech of the Emperor of the French to the diplomatic corps, on New Year's Day, has this year passed without much criticism, in consequence of the complication in which we have been involved with America. Under less exciting circumstances such an occasion would have arrested the attention of the whole of Europe. What the Emperor said seems to have been designed to calm rather than irritate, and that object, apparently, has been answered. It now appears that the scourge of the Paris press is M. de Persigny, and not the Lodridge, who if deposed by the shock more liberal towards the "British estate" than his Minister. The warning to the Journal des Debats was the act of the former, and it was given contrary to the wish of Louis Napoleon. It seems to be understood in Paris, from the spirit of the Emperor's address, that he is about to make an effort to settle terms for the evacuation of Rome.—European Times.

RUSSIA.—Affairs in Russia appear to be approaching a crisis. We have by the telegra n last evening that the University of St. Petersburg has been finally closed by an order from the Minister of Publ Instruction, mentioned by the Emperor. The alleged cause is the recent disturbances, but the real one, no doubt, is the serious attitude recently assumed by the people.—The students are permitted by the Imperial decree to pursue their studies in the other parts of the empire, and the poor students will have pecuniary assistance given them to undertake the journey. We may shortly expect to hear of an explosion in Russia.

The loyalty of the army is by no means unsuspectable, for the Czar has seriously alienated the affections of his people, and when Russia is embarrassed, the Poles will not hesitate to help themselves. Even the serfs, for whom the Czar has sacrificed so much, are ungrateful, and think themselves injured—so dissimular are the views which people take of their respective positions in life.—Ib.

DISTRIBUTION OF TROOPS THROUGHOUT CANADA.

We are enabled to put the public in possession of the decision of the military authorities in reference to the distribution of the troops throughout the Province. The information is received from an official quarter, and may therefore be relied upon as correct, though it is possible that slight alterations in the programme may take place. The judicious disposition of the troops available for the defence of the Province, has doubtless been the subject of much careful consideration, the matter has, of course, been decided by the Imperial authorities, and we doubt not that the Canadian public, especially those of the western section, will be entirely satisfied with the arrangements made. The troops will be disposed of as follows:—

Montreal—Two field batteries of artillery; one garrison detch Royal Artillery; two battalions Fest Guards; one company of Sappers and Miners; the 1st battalions of the 16th and 47th Regiments; and one battalion of the Military Train.

OBITUARY OF COL. COLT.

The following obituary of Col. Colt will be interesting to all who have handled a revolver:—Colonel Samuel Colt, who died at Hartford, Ct., on Thursday, was born in that city, on July 19, 1814. Entering a factory belonging to his father when ten years old, he worked faithfully four years, and then was sent away to school at Amherst, Mass. He managed to run away from this establishment, and shipped as a boy before the mast on a ship bound to the East Indias. On his return from this voyage, he served a short apprenticeship in a factory at Ware, Mass., but getting weary of this manner of life, he assumed the name of Dr. Coult and travelled through the United States and British Provinces, lecturing on Chemistry. The money thus earned enabled him to perfect his famous revolver, of which he had conceived the idea when on his way to Calcutta, and in 1835, when but twenty-one years of age, he took out his first patent for revolving fire-arms. A company was formed in 1835, with a capital of $300,000 to manufacture these arms, but there was at first so little demand for them that it was obliged to suspend in 1842, and when the Mexican war broke out they had gone so entirely out of use that Col. Colt found it necessary to make a new model before he could fill government orders. Since that time, the business has increased so rapidly that the manufactory in Hartford, which had cost altogether $1,000,000, has been found insufficient to supply the demand, although the arms also are made both in England and Russia, at establishments created under Col. Colt's supervision. Col. Colt's ingenuity was not confined to fire-arms. He has invented a submarine battery of great power and efficiency, and as early as 1843 laid and operated a submarine cable from Coney Island and Fire Island to New York, and from the mouth of the harbor to the Merchants Exchange. Although overwhelmed with business cares, Col. Colt had always manifested the greatest interest in the welfare of his employees, having erected for them remarkably tasteful and convenient places of residence, and established a public hall, where they have the privilege of attending courses of lectures.

"SERVED RIGHT."—The Montreal Commercial Advertiser says:—An attempt to impose upon the military authorities here has been promptly met and defeated. Two thousand iron bedsteads were wanted for the troops, and while the contracts were pending, speculators brought up all the iron in the market suitable for the purpose, and held it for a large advance. The War Department decided at once to substitute bedsteads for bedsteads, and the contract for these has been let at about one-fourth the price of iron bedsteads. Bedstead iron has fallen considerably since.

☞ Mason and Slidell arrived at St. George, Bermuda, on the 9th inst., in the British steamer Gladiator, and sailed on the 10th for St. Thomas, whence they will take passage for England.

Married.

MARRIAGES.

When we see the avaricious and crafty taking companions to their tables and their beds, without any inquiry but after farms and money; or the giddy and thoughtless uniting themselves for life to those whom they have only seen by the light of tapers; when parents make articles for children without inquiring after their consent; when some marry some heirs to disappoint their brothers; and others throw themselves into the arms of those whom they do not love, because they found themselves rejected where they were more solicitous to please; when some marry because their servants cheat them; some because their houses are pestered with company; some because they will live like other people; and some because they are sick of themselves; we are not so much inclined to wonder that marriage is sometimes unhappy, as that it appears so little loaded with calamity; and cannot but conclude, that society hath something in itself eminently agreeable to human nature, when we find its pleasures so great, that even the ill choice of a companion can hardly overbalance them. Those, therefore, of the above description, that should rail against matrimony, should be informed, that they are neither to wonder, or to repine, that a contract begun on such principles has ended in disappointment.—Johnson.

An unmarried woman, named Sarah Ann Culver, kept in custody on account of mental derangement, gave birth to a child in Simcoe jail on the 9th inst. At the time of the birth of the child she had been in jail for nine months and nine days. A special session of the Magistrates was held at the Court House on Saturday, to enquire into the circumstances of the case.

also cures GOUT AND DYSPEPSIA, in all their forms. It is now giving relief to thousands who have been suffering form these diseases, and who have tried all other remedies in vain.

has received the highest testimonials from the highest sources in regard to its wonderful efficacy. It operates with equal success in mild and chronic cases, never failing to work out a speedy and permanent cure.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

costs but one dollar a bottle, and less than a bottle often effects the end desired.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

is the only Specific and cure for Rheumatism and Neuralgia that has ever been discovered.

OF the NEW PATENT ENGLISH ELECTRO-GALVANIZED, ANNEALED AND CARBONIZED

LIGHTNING RODS

JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH STRATTS' RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!

AND ENLARGED

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers; is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod. Professor Croft had a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust.

One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, easing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fail in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonised Rod. Common Iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

TORONTO, Sept. 15, 1860.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPerintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

PETERBORO', July 29th, 1861.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods so highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

J. BROWNE, M. D.

I entirely concur in Dr. Browne's observations,—Also have bought two of the same Rods for my two cottages on Brock Street.

Poisonous Minerals and Drugs.

MOTHERS TAKE HEED!

Do you when observing the uneasy actions of your children, consider that it may be more than a mere whim that affects them? In your mouths most of you the cause of the little sufferer's anguish is WORMS, and should be at once looked to.

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE we present you with a correct likeness of Tecaqo, a chief of a tribe of the Orange River Indians, that some resided Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills" has spent the greater part of his life in travelling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "Mountain Herb Pills" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanacs and Pamphlets.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly sympathize. The stomach will not digest the food properly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life soon dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, entitled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c, &c. This Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood those hidden seeds of disease, and restores all the digestive and secretive powers and vessel, clearing and reinvigorating the vital organs.

Pleasant indeed, is it to us, that we are able to place within your reach, a medicine like the "Mountain Herb Pills," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

Bowel Complaints,	Debility,	Inward Weakness,
Cholera,	Fever and Ague,	Liver Complaints,
Colds,	Female Complaints,	Loss of Appetite,
Chest Diseases,	Headaches,	Piles,

GREAT FEMALE MEDICINE

Females who value health should never be without these Pills. They purify the blood, remove obstructions of all kinds, cleanse the skin of all pimples and blotches, and bring the rich color of health to the pale cheek.

☞ The Females of which these Pills are made, were discovered by a very enterprising young man in the Sandwich Islands, a tribe of Aborigines in Mexico. See the Almanac of our Agents, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "Great Discovery" of the Aztecs.

Observe.—The Mountain Herb Pills are put up in a Beautiful Wrapper. Each box contains 40 pills, and Retail at 25 cents per box. All genuine have the signature of R. L. JUDSON & CO. on each box.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiments in many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ST. VITUS'S DANCE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they do not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its virtues, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever was before, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

BURNS AND BEECHER.

[Lines addressed to Henry Ward Beecher, on the occasion of his being appointed to lecture at the occasion of Burns' One Hundredth Anniversary, January, 1859

I learn the task has fa'n to you
To gie the herd o' Ayr his due:
But wae him wool;
He kept sweet Charity in view,
Een for the Deil.

His fauts ye needna tell;
Folk say ye're no o'er guid yoursel;
But Deil-ma-care:
Gin ye're but half as guid as Rab,
We'll ask nae mair.

Tak ilkone seek to find a flaw,
But o'er his fauts a mantle thraw,
And leave the rest
To Him who made and tried the heart
He kens the best.

A century he'ce, and wha can tell
What may befa yer cannie sel?
Some lady preacher
May tak the cudgels up for ane
Ca'd Harry Beecher.

I ha'e nae doubt ye'd like to ken
What's in that teks the auld quill pen
To write this rhyme
The know-legge wad be little worth—
I'm past my prime.

But when a lassie, young and fair,
I've wand red oft by bonnie Ayr,
Wi' heartsome glee,
Her Fates stern mandate sent me forth
Far o'er the sea.

But Scotia's hills and Scotia's plains,
Her poets and her poet's strains
To me are dear—
A dearer spring-wit in my heart—
They claim a tear.

Small Savings.

"I don't see how Holmes does it," said John Stetson, with a very puzzled expression.

"Does what?" asked his wife, looking up from her sewing.

"Why, save so much money from his salary, to be sure."

"Then he does save, does he?"

"You know the half acre lot adjoining his house?"

"Yes."

"Well, he has just bought it for a hundred dollars, and, what is more, payed for it out of money saved from his salary this year."

"How does his salary compare wit yours?"

"He has only seven hundred dollars a year, while I have eight. Then our families are the same; each of us have two children."

"Yet I am afraid you don't save near that amount."

"No; I guess not. The fact is, if I find myself square at the end of the year, I think myself lucky."

"And yet, John," said his wife gravely, "it seems to me as if we ought to lay by something."

"It is easy enough to say that, but the question is, how are we going to do it?—There's Mary's music lessons, at ten dollars a quarter. That's the only way I can think of, and I shouldn't want to stop those."

"No, of course not, but isn't there any other way?"

"Not that I know of."

"Don't you think, John, that the little incidental expences cost more than you think for?"

"Such as what?"

"Cigars, ice cream, oysters, the theatre, and so on."

John Stetson winced a little.

"They are mere trifles," said he carelessly. "A few cents each time. Pooh! they would make precious little difference at the end of the year."

"You know there's an old proverb—'Many a little makes a muckle.'"

"Pshaw! I hate proverbs. Besides, the little things are really of very little account. A man doesn't feel the sum he pays out, and it didn't go in one way it would in another."

"How many cigars do you smoke daily?" pursued his wife.

"Three."

"And how much money do you pay for them?"

"Four cents a piece."

"That would make twelve cents."

"And what's twelve cents."

"Not much in itself, but multiplied by a larger number it amounts to something."

"What are you driving at, wife?"

"I am going to make a proposition to you."

"I'm all attention."

"You say you don't mind a few cents a day?"

"Of course not."

"Then I propose that a small box be obtained with a slit in the lid, just like the children's on saving boxes, it short only larger; and that for every cent you spend for cigars, ice cream, theatres, or any such luxury you deposit an 'equal sum' in the box."

John Stetson laughed.

"I dare say," he remarked, "it would bring me out a present Census at the end of the year."

"Do you agree?" asked his wife with some appearance of anxiety.

"Yes, I have no great objection, if you desire it, though I acknowledge it seems a little foolish and childish."

"Never mind about that. I have your promise, and we'll try the experiment one year. If it don't amount to enough to make it an object, then it will do little to give it up."

"You must take all the trouble of it. I am willing to do anything within reason to furnish the money when called for."

"That is all I require of you. But I shall expect you to give an account every night of all you have disbursed in the way of cigars, and to be prepared with an equal number of cents for deposit."

"Very well, I'll try," he said with a smile. "I have no doubt you'll tire of the business before the end of the year."

When his wife added up the daily sums she found to her own surprise even, that she had received from her husband two dollars and sixty-two cents. He would have been astonished to hear it but she thought it best not to say anything about it. He would have alleged that it was a special case, as they did not go to the theatre every week. This was true, but then something else was sure to come of equivalent cost, such as a ride or concert.

So time slipped away. The necessity, according to the compact, of giving his wife as much as he spent, for incidental expenses, no doubt contributed to check him somewhat, so that probably he did not spend more than two-thirds as much in this way as he had done before the agreement.—Still, he kept up to the average of the first week.

We will now suppose the year to have glided by. John Stetson came into the sitting room with a pre-occupied air.

"What are you thinking about?" asked his wife.

"About the half acre lot adjoining the one Holmes bought last year."

"Do you wish to purchase it?"

"Yes, I should like to; but of course I can't, not having the money."

"How much do they ask for it?"

"Holmes paid a hundred dollars for his. This is on some accounts preferable, and they hold it at one hundred and twenty-five dollars."

"Perhaps you could raise the money, John," said his wife quietly.

"By borrowing. I should not want to do that."

"You remember our fund?"

"Pshaw! That may possibly amount to thirty or forty dollars."

"Suppose we count it, as the year is up to-day?"

"Very well."

The two were opened, and husband and wife commenced counting. They soon reached and passed forty dollars.

"Then my soul," said John Stetson, "I had no idea that's was so much."

The total with the interest when the fund passed to the one hundred and twenty dollars, and left forty cents remaining.

"Now see your saving thy dollar," said his wife, laughing, as she swept from the table. Having finished the breakfast of coffee, John Stetson put on his overcoat and took his way to his business. I suppose will mention to him the circumstance that he was cashier of a bank and as his duties occupied him only a few hours in the day, he was the more likely, from the leisure which he enjoyed, to indulge in small expenses.

"My wife is an enthusiast," thought he, as he was walking down town. "However her hobby won't cost me much, so I might as well indulge her in it."

He stepped into a store and obtained his daily allowance of cigars.

Meantime Mrs. Stetson proceeded to a cabinet maker's shop.

"I want you," said she, "to make me a mahogany box, twelve inches long, the other dimensions being four inches each. In the centre of the top is to be a slit, large enough to admit the largest silver coin."

"A money box," said the cabinet maker.

"Yes."

"Pretty large for that, isn't it?"

"Rather," said Mrs. Stetson, smiling, "but it is better to be too large than too small."

John Stetson fell in with a companion in the afternoon, with whom he had a social chat. As they were walking leisurely along, they passed an oyster saloon.

Stetson was particularly fond of the bivalves, and he proposed that they should go in and take some.

To this his friend did not demur, and they accordingly entered. The plates of oysters came to twenty-five cents. Besides this, they took a glass of ale, which made twelve cents more. This brought up the bill to thirty-seven cents for cigars, he deposited forty-nine cents in his wife's bank that evening.

"I might as well make it fifty," said he smiling.

"No," said she, not a cent over. I want the savings to represent exactly what you spend on these little luxuries, and no more."

The next evening he had nothing to deposit, except the usual amount for cigars.

"It won't amount up very fast at that rate," said he triumphantly.

"Never mind," said his wife. "I don't want you to increase your expenditures on my account. I am inclined to think it will not be often as small as this."

She was right.

The next day, being Wednesday, John Stetson brought home a couple of tickets for the theatre. It was a benefit night, and he was very anxious that his wife should go.

"Certainly," said she, "I shall be very glad to go, but you remember our compact?"

"What?"

"How much did you pay for the tickets?"

"Fifty cents a piece."

"That will make a dollar. Please hand me that amount for our fund."

"And yet, John," said his wife gravely, "it seems to me as if we ought to lay by something."

"It is easy enough to say that, but the question is, how are we going to do it?—There's Mary's music lessons, at ten dollars a quarter. That's the only way I can think of, and I shouldn't want to stop those."

"No, of course not, but isn't there any other way?"

"Not that I know of."

"Don't you think, John, that the little incidental expences cost more than you think for?"

"Such as what?"

"Cigars, ice cream, oysters, the theatre, and so on."

John Stetson winced a little.

"They are mere trifles," said he carelessly. "A few cents each time. Pooh! they would make precious little difference at the end of the year."

"You know there's an old proverb—'Many a little makes a muckle.'"

"Pshaw! I hate proverbs. Besides, the little things are really of very little account. A man doesn't feel the sum he pays out, and it didn't go in one way it would in another."

"How many cigars do you smoke daily?" pursued his wife.

"Three."

"And how much money do you pay for them?"

"Four cents a piece."

"That would make twelve cents."

"And what's twelve cents."

"Not much in itself, but multiplied by a larger number it amounts to something."

"What are you driving at, wife?"

"I am going to make a proposition to you."

the little expences we spoke of, we might have had in the neighborhood of two hundred dollars."

John Stetson did see it, and he determined that the lesson should be a serviceable one. The half-acre lot was bought, and now at the end of five years, it is worth double what he paid for it.

He has also laid aside two hundred dollars a year during this period, and all by small savings.

HE DIED POOR.

"It was a sad funeral to me," said the speaker; "the saddest I have attended for years."

"That of Edmonson."

"Yes."

"How did he die?"

"Poor—poor as poverty; his life was one long struggle with the world, and at every disadvantage. Fortune mocked him all the while with gilded promises that were never to know fulfilment."

"Yet he was patient and enduring," remarked one of the company.

"Patient as a Christian—enduring as a martyr," was the answer. "Poor man! He was worthy of a better fate. He ought to have succeeded, for he deserved success."

"Did he not succeed?" questioned the one who had spoken of his perseverance and endurance.

"No, sir; he died poor, as I bve just said. Nothing that he put his hands to, ever succeeded. A strange fatality seemed to attend every enterprise."

"I was with him in his last moments," said another, "and thought he died rich."

"No, he has left nothing behind," was replied. "The heirs will have no concern as to the administration of the estate."

"He left a good name," said one, "and that is something."

"And a legacy of noble deeds that were done in the name of humanity," remarked another.

"Lessons of patience in suffering, of hope in adversity, of heavenly confidence when no sunbeams fell upon his bewildering path," was the testimony of another.

"And high trust, manly courage, heroic fortitude."

"Then he died rich!" was the emphatic declaration; "richer than the millionaire who went to his long home the same day, a miserable pauper in all but gold. "A sad funeral," did you say? No, my friend, it was rather a triumphal procession! Not the burial of human clod, but the ceremonies attendant on the translation of an angel. Did not succeed! Why, his whole life was a series of successes. In every conflict he came off victor, and now the victor's crown is on his brow. Any grasping, soulless, selfish man, with a share of brains, may gather money, and learn the art of keeping it; but not one in a hundred can bravely conquer in the battle of life as Edmonson has conquered, and step forth from the ranks of men, a Christian hero."

ANECDOTES OF THE QUEEN.

I have heard the Bishop of Winchester relate an anecdote of the Queen, the other day at a meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society, which makes one hope that Her Majesty will derive comfort, in her great trial, from the Blessed Book which she knew to contain consolation for her suffering subjects. He said that a parish Minister of a little village near Osborne, in going his rounds entered a cottage, where one of his parishioners—a young girl—was dying of consumption. He found by the bedside a lady in black, reading to her the Bible. The lady on his entrance retired; and then he found that this ministering angel was the Queen.

Rumor tells another anecdote of the Queen, which shews her tender heart and her memory of the Crimean bloodshed.

They say that when Lord Palmerston took for her sanction the ultimatum demand on the Federal Government for the restitution of the men taken from the Trent, she said that if mere etiquette and not national honor was to be satisfied, she could not endure the thought of the sacrifice of so many precious, gallant, lives. That Lord Palmerston then asked if she would be more content if Lord Derby were consulted,—and that on giving his opinion that Lord Palmerston's demand was just and righteous, she gave her sanction.

Such stories as these are peculiarly acceptable to the people at the present time, as proving Victoria a good woman, as well as a noble Queen.—From a private Letter.

HOW A DRUNKEN LOVER LOOKS.

In a "Life of Love," the authoress thus truthfully describes it;—"I have been thinking how horrible it must be to see anybody one cares for, drunk—the honest eyes dull and meaningless; the wise lips jabbering foolishness; the whole face and figure, instead of being what one likes to look at, taken pleasure to see in the same room even, growing ugly, irrational, disgusting—more like a beast than a man. Yet some women have to bear it, have to speak kindly to their husbands, bade their brutishness and keep them from making worse fools of themselves than they can help. I have seen it done, not merely by working men's wives, but lady-like wives in drawing rooms. I think if I were married, and saw my husband the least overcome by liquor, not "drunk" if, may be, but just excited, silly, otherwise than as natural self it would nearly drive me wild. Less on my account than his. To see him sink—not for a great crime, but a contemptible, cowardly bit of self-enslavement—from the height my love had placed him, to keep to take care of him, to pity him—yes, and I might pity him—but I think that self glory and passion of my love would die out, then and there, forever.

THE WYNDHAM LUNACY CASE.

From the London Star.

We are all in a fair way of learning how much it costs to prove a man mad who is in possession of £15,000 a year. For there is a scale in all things. As in the case of the franchise, it is property, not personal worth, which decides the question. Any poor devil may be as eccentric as he likes in his conduct, may play foolish pranks, look with vacant stare, and indulge in loud and, except to himself, unmeaning laughter; he is quite safe from the attention of affectionate friends anxious about his sanity, and stands in no fear of the inquisition presided over by a Master in Lunacy. But if we have £15,000 a year to spend, the case is widely different. A fortune to that amount is worth a great effort to preserve or obtain, and certainly the effort to prove Mr Wyndham an idiot or a lunatic may be characterized as a prodigious one. The Master in Lunacy, an intelligent jury, a formidable bar, have now been engaged in the matter for four days, and as yet the inquiry has only just begun. Master Warren contemplates so long prolonged a job of it, that he talks of going elsewhere for a time, to other duties on New Year's Day, and resuming the inquiry on the 8th January, although this is only the 28th December. Air ady it seems he has sealed and signed summonses to nearly two hundred and fifty witnesses, many of whom are to come from all parts of England and Ireland, Scotland, and even from Russia. He is seriously distressed on the subject, and looks upon the expense of such an inquiry as necessarily frightful. But Mr Warren obviously forgets the stake at issue—namely, £15,000 a year—and besides, to whom should the expense be frightful? Mr. Wyndham may perhaps have some pangs and twitches about it, but then it is not his doing—he cannot help it; as Sir Hugh Cairns says, it depends upon the petitioners whether the inquiry is to be long or a short one, expensive or not. And as in any case the costs will be paid out of the estate of the unlucky young man, it is evidently the interest of the petitioners to spare no expense that they think may help to further their object. The lawyers, too, who have the management of the cases pro and con, no doubt think they may as well have a share of the spoil. Chancery has both its claws and teeth somewhat pared by the legislation of the last twenty years, but it still has the same inclination and much of the old powers to keep fat estates within its den, when it gets them there, until they become lean ones.

We know nothing more comic, either, than the sort of stuff which so far is reported as the evidence. Windham has been described from his cradle upwards. We have seen him in short clothes, and been naughty in his mamma's sitting room. We have seen him under his tutor, who found him a dirty lad and dull in learning. We have seen him at Eton, where he used to indulge in ja kpudding antics for the amusement of his comp nions, and where, because he was known to be the heir to £15,000 a year, indulgences were shown to him which other boys, not so favored in the way of fortune, could not get. We have seen him in public society at dinners, at balls, on the promenade, at Baden, and elsewhere. We have heard that his upper lip is so conformed as to shut down on the teeth with difficulty, which imparts, of course, a rather sheepish look. We learn that he used to slobber, and frequently to laugh when other people saw nothing to laugh at, just as if they could see the fun-provoking images passing through the lad's mind. He used to be rude to ladies, principally by staring at them, which certainly is rude; but ask the young men of ton, the men about town at the West End, whether it signifies idiotcy or lunacy. He once plucked an Italian's whiskers; then he was a reckless rider, and used to gallop his pony over a hackney-coach—another infallible proof of imbecility. One very funny circumstance—if you consider it—is that some of these witnesses, ladies, who now come forward to prove Mr Wyndham an idiot or insane, were, at the very periods their evidence refers to, receiving his visits, and even inviting him to their houses, introducing him to their friends, and allowing him to dance with their daughters. But, then, it must be remembered that at that time Mr Windham was heir to a magnificent estate, and was still unmarried, and that makes all the difference. There are still, however, further proofs in sustainment of the case set up by his kind uncles and other distinguished relatives. Mr Windham is a native of Norfolk, and he sometimes speaks with the Norfolk brogue.—Nothing surely, can be more conclusive of his want of reasonable discernment than this. For a Norfolk man to fall into the Norfolk accent, and instead of saying "So you say," say "So yow say," is a significant fact. Then as a boy, when he got his clothes cleaned, he would go out into the yard or garden and straightway dirty them—a thing which, as every body knows, boys never do. Neither are boys, and especially Norfolk boys, fond of Norfolk puddings; yet this boy was, and certainly on one occasion ate a whole pudding. Besides he was noisy and boisterous, and was such an idiot as to snore in his sleep. He wanted to get, during his adolescence, a commission in the Guards, and when told he would have to pass an examination first he derided the idea; his uncle, Major-General Windham, he said, would make that all right. The last proof of idiotcy is overwhelming, for who ever heard of him wishing to marry? Why, it must be confessed that he was engaged in such a way of proving a man mad or imbecile; but surely there is still an easier. Why go to all the expense of all this effort, all this consumption of time? Why, Saddleback's state of mind is not like a fact or event that has occurred and must be remitted for by witnesses having evidence of it. It is a present fact that Mr Wyndham and the intelligent jury of his peers, form part of issue. It is open and open to all the world, direct evidence of [illegible]

THE UNITED STATES COMING OF AGE.

(From the Philadelphia Press.)

We are gradually entering upon a new phase of national existence. If this war produces no other result, it will revolutionize the Republic, in its social, political, and international relations. We are no longer with the past. Its conditions, its associations, its memories, are even fading away. The people who make history rarely read it. The trials for which we honored our fathers are visited upon us; and what they were to us, we shall be to our children.—Our trial comes to us in a more fearfully magnificent shape; greater in its proportions; greater and grander in its results.—We have been living in the days of national youth, sporting and gambolling with destiny; our griefs, those of an hour; our responsibilities, few and feeble. As a nation, this Republic has been a spoiled, fretful, petulant, and haughty boy. We have not as yet been an active member of the family of nations. A people of peace—blessed with wondrous resources—wealthy beyond the imagination of man—the granary of the world—the treasury of the world—comprising two zones, and bounded by ocean coasts—looking out upon Europe from the West, and the gorgeous countries of Asia and the South Seas from the East—we have grown giddy with greatness.—As a spendthrift with a large inheritance, we have abused and squandered it. Wars which Napoleon and Wellington would have regarded as military jests, we have magnified into campaigns more magnificent than those of Alexander. Not burdened by taxation—Government a mere name—and the duties of Government the simple gratification of ambition and pride—we have whirled along blindly, exhibiting a confidence almost amounting to infatuation; disregarding the lessons of history and the impulses of reason; so trusting and frank that we could not realize the possibility of treachery, until now we are suddenly confronted with an enemy of our own creation, who menaces our existence.

A CONFEDERATE SMUGGLING PROJECT.

A Boston daily remarks that the Richmond, Va., Examiner has a long editorial on the manufacturing interests of the South, which makes a bold statement of the need of the rebels for arms and materials used in manufactures, which they have not, and can only get from Europe. To secure these arms and materials, used in the arts, it proposes the organization of a grand governmental smuggling association, with a capital of fifty millions, to be invested in goods purchased in Europe and to be sent South in vessels which are to run the Federal blockade. It thinks that if one-half of the vessels thus employed should be captured, still the enterprise would pay one hundred per cent profit. The Examiner says:

"It would be of incalculable advantage to the South if peace should find us with a direct trade already organized and in operation with Europe. The tendency of our merchants, on the close of the war, will be at once to rush off to New York, and to renew the old system of transactions broken up by the war; and nothing can prevent the recurrence of that system except an already organized and digested system of direct trade with Europe in actual operation."

The Examiner confesses that present needs furnish the greatest incentives to such an enterprise, the other advantages being accidental, and says "our necessity for some of the substances employed in the arts is greater than it would be agreeable to confess."

A SAD DEATH.

Alexander Donaldson, of Montreal, a steam-fitter in the employment of Mr Chas. Garth, met with a fatal accident on Tuesday last. Since the arrival of the troops certain men have required to come to a convent at Côte des Nieges. The boiler formerly used for heating that building not having been in use for five years, Donaldson and some others were employed to mend it. Donaldson was working at the safety valve, right under the cistern, while every effort was being made to heat the boiler in the cellar. The foreman, who was engaged about the cistern, seeing that the water was fast rising called out to Alexander Donaldson to look out and save himself. Donaldson, and there was no fear, but the word was scarcely uttered when, like a flash of gas, the boiling water burst up out of the pipe in the cellar, scalding Alexander Donaldson, who was beneath it, so that from head to foot he was one mass of blisters. Assistance was rendered, but the poor fellow died in the Hospital, where he died on Thursday. An inquest was held, and a verdict of accidental death was pronounced. Correspondent that it was the throwing of water into the boiling water which made it explode. His funeral took place yesterday afternoon, and was largely attended by his friends and well wishers. He was a sober and very respectable man, and it is said Mr. Grath lost one of his best mechanics.—Witness.

DELICACY.

Above every other feature which adorns the female character, delicacy stands foremost within the province of good taste.—Not that delicacy which is perpetually in quest of concealing, or the adornment of which makes a merit of a blush, and suspects at the false construction its own ingenuity has put on an innocent remark. That spurious kind of delicacy is as far removed from good taste as from good feeling and good sense; but that high-minded delicacy which maintains its pure and undeviating walk alike amongst women as in the society of men; which shrinks from no necessary duty and can speak, when required, with composure and kindness, of things at which it would be ashamed indeed to smile or blush. This is the delicacy which forms so important a part of good taste, that, where it does not exist, as a natural instinct, it is taught as the first principle of good manners, and considered as the universal passport to good society.—Mrs. Ellis.

EARLY INFLUENCES.

There can be no greater blessing than to be born in the light and air of a cheerful, loving home. It not only secures a happy childhood—if there be health and a good constitution—but it also makes sure a virtuous and happy manhood, and a fresh, young heart in old age. I think it every parent's duty to try to make their children's childhood full of love and childhood's proper joyousness; and I never see children destitute of them through the poverty, faulty temper, or wrong notions of their parents, without a heartache. Not that all the appliances which wealth can buy are necessaries to the free and happy unfolding of childhood in body, mind and heart—quite otherwise, God be thanked! but children must at least have love inside the house, and fresh air, and good play, and some good companionship outside—otherwise young life runs the greatest danger in the world of withering, or growing stunted, or at best prematurely old and turned inward on itself.—Dr. Oldham.

BASHFULNESS.

A gudeman wished his son to go and court a farmer's daughter. The son was soft and bashful and did not like, through shyness, to make the first proposals. The father himself went, on a winter evening, and in course of conversation took an opportunity of breaking the ice on this subject for his saddle." The son was left to speak for himself next evening. He talked well all the evening about sheep and cattle, and before he took his departure said to the parents, with his eyes fixed on the fire-place. "Well am I gaun to get you?"

"What you?" was the immediate reply; "Oh, you that my father spak about? Ye're green."

TO LET.—There are more things to let than are placed thus. Hearts are to let every day; old hearts, young hearts, stricken hearts—all empty—all to let.

There are heads to let; to any new thing; to isms, ologies, and fads; heads without a tenant. There are hands to let; hands plump and fair; hands lean and brown; those to labor, those to love; those for rags, and those for rings. There are consciences to let; elastic, accommodating, cadutchouc; at five per cent a month, 60 per cent a year. To let on bond and mortgage, and a pound of flesh.

And so it goes from ends to ends; almost everything to let; almost everything with its price; everything in the market but griefs. They are never quoted; never at a premium, never to let.

EARLY RISING.

Late rising is not the habit of the very higher classes for royalty itself sets a contrary example; and we have met, before now, princes taking their ride before breakfast at 6 o'clock. The present King of Hanover we have repeatedly seen, not at that time. We have known Lord Brougham, when Chancellor, make appointments on matters of business at his private residence for eight o'clock in the morning; his own time of rising being four in the summer and half-past six in the winter. Supposing that a man rises at six instead of eight, every morning of his life, he will save in the course of forty years, twenty-nine thousand hours, which is a great accession of available time for study or business; being, in fact, a year of three years, four months, two weeks, and six days. To any person of foresight, calculation and industry, the fact will prove of sufficient temptation to effect the healthy and useful habit of early rising.—The Mechanics' Journal.

NO STATION FOR THE "FELLOWS" MASON AND SLIDELL—THEY ARE OF NO MORE CONSEQUENCE THAN TWO NEGROES, BUT MAY ATTRACT A CROWD, LIKE TOM SAYERS.

(From the London Times, Jan. 11.)

A turn of the wheel, which the American Cabinet has managed to make as sudden as possible, brings us a new question. The four American gentlemen who have got us into our late trouble, and cost us probably a million apiece, will soon be in one of our ports. Any day and hour we may expect to hear of their arrival at Liverpool, and their journey to the metropolis. Like the rest of their countrymen, they believe themselves to be of immense importance to their cause, whatever it may be. Neither side can give England the smallest credit for understanding or wishing to understand, or having the capacity to understand, the rights of their case; and so nothing will serve them but there must be somebody always digging in our ears some details or platitudes to which the speakers attach a special value. Federalist after Federalist, Confederate after Confederate has arrived in this country in the full persuasion that if he were once permitted to occupy the attention of Lord Palmerston or Lord Russell, night and day for a fortnight, or to fill a page of the Times every day for that period, England would at least begin to have an inkling of the case, and would rush to the aid of the Federal or Confederate cause. These two Commissioners and their secretaries are not unlikely to think even more of their importance than other similar arrivals, owing, moreover, to their own persons the rabid anxiety of their Northern countrymen not to let them be seen or heard in this island. To the sedate English mind this ridiculous rivalry for the exclusive possession of the British ear is only an older version of what is often witnessed in our nurseries. A fearful uproar of words, screams and blows reaches the mother, who hastens to allay the tumult. When she arrives, she finds all confusion, and Master John and Master Tom each with a tale of outrages and provocations, each resolved to have the word, and afraid of nothing so much as that the other should get a hearing. The parent sees enough to be sure that both were abundantly in the wrong, but that it is impossible to adjudicate between them. The general impression in this country is that both sides in the States have acted as ill as could be, and that it is not for England to decide which of them bears the palm for insolence, outrage, treachery and folly.—However, Messrs. Mason and Slidell will not be easily persuaded but that they can throw much new light on the rupture, and on its bearings upon our interests. If we will only be so good as to shut both our eyes and our ears to every body and to everything else, and take it for Gospel all that they say, we shall at last be in a condition to form an opinion on this quarrel, and the only opinion we can possibly come to is that we must immediately recognize the Southern States, send a fleet to break up the blockade, sweep the Northern commerce off the sea, and finally assist to inaugurate Mr. Jefferson Davis in whatever city of the whole Union he would prefer for that purpose.

How, then, are we to receive these illustrious visitors? Of course, they will be stared at, and followed, and photographed, and made the subject of paragraphs. There is no help for that. Mr. Thomas Sayers cannot walk the streets with a friend, or ask the Mayor for permission to put up a booth in a market place, but the crowd immediately conclude the rough, hard-visaged, ill-favoured pair, to be the Confederate Commissioners. Messrs. Mason and Slidell, with their two secretaries, though not so handsome and graceful as their countryman Blondin, would certainly fill the Crystal Palace, if they proposed to address the visitors there on the merits of their cause. But, for the benefit of the discriminating—for the guidance of the minority that prefers at least a respectable idol, and that does not wish to throw away its confidence and applause, we may as well observe that Messrs. Mason and Slidell are about the most worthless booty it would be possible to extract from the jaws of the American lion. They have long been known as the blind and habitual haters and revilers of this country. They have done more than any men to get up the insane prejudices against England which disgraces the morality and disorders the policy of the Union. The hatred of this country has been their stock in trade. On this they have earned their political livelihood and won their position, just as there are others who pander to the lower passions of humanity. A diligent use of this bad capital has made them what they are, and raised them to the rank of Commissioners. It is through their lifelong hatred and abuse of England that they come here in their present conspicuous capacity. The nation under whose flag they sought a safe passage across the Atlantic—the nation that has now treated them with all her might from that certainty of a dungeon and the chances of retaliatory murder, is that against which they have always done their best to exasperate their countrymen. Had they perished in the cell or on the scaffold, amid the triumphant yells of the multitude, memory would have suggested that their own bitter tirades had raised the storm, and that their death was only the natural and logical conclusion of their own calumnies and sophistries.

So we do sincerely hope that our countrymen will not give these fellows anything in the shape of an ovation. The civility that is due to a foe in distress is all that they can claim. We have returned them good for evil, and, sooth to say, we should be exceedingly sorry that they should ever be in a situation to choose what return they will make for the good we have now done them. They are here for their own interest in order, if possible, to drag us into their own quarrel, and, but for the unpleasant contingencies of a prison, rather disappointed, perhaps, that their detention has got provoked a new war. When they stepped on board the Trent they did not trouble themselves with the thought of the mischief they might be doing as unoffending neutrals; and if now, by any less perilous device, they could entangle us in the war, no doubt they would be only too happy. We trust there is no chance of their doing this, for, as impartial as the British public is on the matter, it certainly has no prejudice in favor of slavery, which, if anything, these gentlemen represent. What they and their secretaries are to do here passes our conjecture. They are, personally nothing to us. They must fix purpose, however we have gone to the very verge of a great war to remove them, that therefore they are precious in our eyes. We should have done just as much to rescue two of their own negroes, and, had that been the object of the rescue, the exploits Pompey and Cæsar would have had just the same right to favor treasonful oratio and emancipated addresses as Messrs. Mason and Slidell. So, please, British public let's have none of these things. Let the Commissioners come up quietly to town, and have their say with anybody who likely have time to listen to them. For our part, we cannot see how anything they have to tell can turn the scale of British duty and deliberation. There have been so many cases of peoples and nations establishing an actual independence, and compelling the recognition of the world, that all we have to do is what we have done before, up to the very last year. This is now a simple precedent. Our statesmen and lawyers know quite as much on the subject as Messrs. Mason and Slidell, and are in no need of their information or advice.

MR. RUSSELL ON THE SURRENDER.

Washington, Dec. 27.

Omitting all matters of detail till next post, I hasten to announce that the Government of the United States has acceded to the demand of Great Britain, and has consented to surrender Mr. Mason, Mr. Slidell, and their secretaries. This morning Mr. Seward sent to Lord Lyons a request that his Lordship would call at the State Department, and in the interview which took place Mr. Seward handed the British Minister an exceedingly voluminous note which will no doubt see the light some day in England, and informed him at the same time that the captives were at his disposal. Let us not take this act as the expression of the conviction that they were wrong in retaining their prisoners, and that the measure was an outrage, nor let us, until we know the nature of the despatch, attribute any other motives to them than the desire to do what is right. The effect in this country, when it is known, will be exceedingly great, for such a dish of humble pie cannot be taken into stomachs which have been disordered by cocktail talking without a great deal of nausea. Do not imagine that the real intelligence and worth of the people will disapprove the act. The men I allude to are the writers in the sensation press, and the bunkum orators, as well as the more violent Abolitionists, who by inveighing measures and intemperate pledges have bound themselves to oppose the concession, no matter how just it might prove to be. Doubtless, Mr. Seward in the elaborate dispatch he was written will seek to show that Great Britain has laid down some new principle in this transaction, and in swelling periods will endeavor to demonstrate that by yielding the prisoners the United States has gained some great point for herself and the world in general from Great Britain, which can never again take political offenders from neutral ships. Let it be so. The case is memorable enough and clear enough to serve as a precedent. No one can doubt that the relations of both countries would have been much more satisfactory if the Government of Washington had restored the prisoners as soon as it heard of the capture, and if all the irritating writing and speaking to which we have been treated here, and the expense, anxiety, and sense of indignity to which we were exposed in Britain, had been obviated. I fear that the wrath to come will be greater than anything yet experienced by us, and that a terrible future is in store for Great Britain, at the indefinite time when so many great things are to come to pass. The Government here, which has thus far got over its external dangers, will now have to face a tremendous ordeal. The sense of justice or right or even necessity cannot prevail over the cherished love of doing what they like among the masses. The Union can get half a million of men to fight for her, at a considerable expense, it is true, but moved in the main, let us admit, by love for the Union; but she could, I am assured, raise a million to fight against England. That is, the hate of Great Britain is at least twice as strong as the love for the Union among many millions of Americans. They will be disappointed this time. If Mason and Slidell be surrendered without any extravagant threath in the press, or without any indignation meetings, we may hope that friendly relations will be preserved for years to come, as it will be a token that in a crisis the sound sense, patriotism, and a desire to do what is demanded by justice and right predominate in the United States over the violence of popular passion. Let us stand by and see if it will be so, and let us be thankful meantime that we are spared the war which would have been forced upon us in vindication of our honor had the Government here been deaf to the voice of reason. The secret of the Government has been well kept. Mr. Seward must have enjoyed the pleasure of tantalizing Mr. Sumner and the other senators and politicians who thought to worm out his secret, for he is fond of a joke, and could not have been indifferent to the pangs of the Chairman of Foreign Relations of the Senate, who to the last persisted in believing or in stating that Great Britain had made no absolute demand which did not admit of either a deliciously long correspondence, or a delicate negociation by mediator or arbitrator. Some of my good friends of the sword who have been very fierce and belligerent will, no doubt, be difficult to appease. Men like M'Dowell, Halleck and General Scott, who appreciated the gravity of the question, have spoken of it with moderation. Some of them, indeed, have from the first maintained that the seizure was unjustifiable.—As to the officers of the navy, I must do them the justice to say that those I have met were from the first willing to surrender the Southern Commissioners, and that more than one expressed the strongest disapprobation of Capt. Wilkes' act, not withstanding that the Secretary of the Navy had highly lauded him. Mr. Wells is of the same opinion still, and submits to "force majere." Mr. Fox, the able and experienced Assistant Secretary of the Navy—a naval officer who has seen the world, and has raised his head above the clouds and mists which dim the vision of the indigenous American who has never stirred out of his own country—differed from his chief. There were people who went about talking and writing in the most patriotic manner about never surrendering until death or afterwards, and seeing every city in a blaze before they would surrender their prisoners. These people will now most probably go about using the same language in another sense, and declaring that it would have been better to have done all sorts of things than to have performed an act of justice, and have averted much bloodshed and misery to two kindred nations, while they at a blow destroyed the possibility of success in the contest on which they had set their hearts. The interval which has elapsed since Monday when Lord Lyons presented his note, of which he had at several previous interviews discussed the nature with Mr. Seward, was not unreasonably long, though it has given birth to a despatch which might not be characterised in the same way, and the press and the politicians were alike in the dark as to the demand of Great Britain, and the view taken of them by the Government. It was only the presence of circumstances and the unanswerable arguments founded on the state of the navy and the present position of affairs, which prevailed over the indignation of the highest persons in the State to yield the prisoners. So late as yesterday a violent speech was made in the Senate by Mr. Wade, in introducing a resolution for the correspondence arising out of the Trent affair.

Colored persons, included in the above, 11,413

The French Canadians are in a majority in the following parts of Lower Canada:—

Argenteuil,	Brome,
Compton,	Huntingdon,
Missisquoi,	Montreal,
Pontiac,	Richmond,
Sherbrook, and	Stanstead.

They are not in a majority in any county or city in Upper Canada, but they are very numerous in Prescott, Russell, Essex, and Ottawa.

Emigrants of various origins have clustered together, locally, to a considerable extent.

In Upper Canada the Irish seem to have preferred Frontenac, Hastings, Kingston, and Simcoe; the Scotch have chosen Bruce, Grey, Huron, Wellington, and Hamilton; the English have shown particular liking for Oxford, Middlesex, and London, also for Durham, and Ontario. The Germans have chosen Waterloo, and Perth.

In Lower Canada the Scotch have selected Huntingdon, the English St. John's, the Irish Ottawa, Pontiac and Quebec counties, and the Americans, as might be expected, Stanstead.

The Roman Catholic Church is in a minority in Lower Canada in

Argenteuil,	Brome,
Compton,	Huntingdon,
Missisquoi,	Richmond,
Sherbrooke, and	Stanstead.

It is in a majority in Upper Canada in Prescott and Russell.

In Glengary, Carlton, and Essex, the difference in the numbers of Roman Catholics and Protestants respectively is not large.

The professors of various creeds seem to have classed themselves quite as much with reference to locality as the people of different races.

In Upper Canada the greatest number of BibleChristians have congregated in Durham, of Jews in Oxford, of Menonists in Waterloo, of Universalists and also Quakers in Prince Edward, of Disciples in Welington, of men of no religion in Ontario, and of Mormons in Essex.

In Lower Canada the greatest number of Unitarians are in Montreal, of men of no religion in Shefford, of "Protestants" and also Quakers in Brome. There are but three Mormons in Lower Canada, of whom one resides in Huntingdon, one in Brome, and one amongst us in Quebec. There is not a Menonist or Tunker in all Lower Canada.

It is not a little curious that while there is not a single colored person in Ottawa city, the greatest number found in any place in Lower Canada (104) are in Ottawa county, close by. There are but two colored people in Quebec; in Hamilton, C. W., 62.

"COMPROMISE."

DR. BROWNSON has a vigorous article in the January number of his Quarterly, on "The Struggle of the Nation for Life." He says:—

"Let no man dare breathe the word 'compromise.' The day for compromise has gone by. The man, be he President, or Secretary, or Senator, or General, who shall propose and effect a compromise, will stand branded in history as an infamous traitor to his country and to humanity.

"We tell the President, and we desire to do so with all possible respect, that even the restoration of the Union on a policy shaped expressly to conciliate 'Ole Kentuck," or the slaveholding interest of any of the border states, would now, if possible, not be worth effecting. Why was he elected to the Presidency. Why have we of the loyal states placed him in his present elevated position? No man better than himself knows that we voted for him at the risk of civil war and the dissolution of the Union, because we were determined that the slave interest should no longer shape the policy and govern the councils of the nation. It was this determination on the part of the freemen of the East, the, North, and the West that took Mr. Lincoln from his lawoffice and made him President. He was not elected to serve slavery, nor to abolish slavery; but he was elected to emancipate the Administration and the republic itself from the domination of the slave interest; and we protest, therefore, in the name of those who elected him, against the perpetuation of that domination, even though confined to the slave interest of Maryland, Kentucky, and Missouri. Slavery may or may not continue to exist, but we insist that the Government shall cease to be administered in its interests or under its dictation.

"We have resolved that our Government shall be emancipated, whatever becomes of slavery and its worshipers. This is what we beg the Administration to bear in mind. We should be glad to believe that the President has not forgotten it, and that he is prepared to assert his own independence of the slave-power, and that of the Government, for we tell him never will there and never can there be a reunion of the separated states under the domination of the slave interest."

THE GRAND TRUNK.

WASTINGS FOLLOWED WATERLOO.

The County Councils are speaking out plainly against the proposed subsidy to the Grand Trunk Railway. Mr. Geo. Benjamin, M. P. P. in Warden of the County of Hastings, but neither he nor any of his party ventured to defend the grant. The Belleville Chronicle reports the proceedings as follows:—

"Mr. FLINT said he had a most [illegible] he wished to read. He had not intended any one to second it, and he did not know whether it could stand with the approval of the Council; he would read it, however.—That this Council send to Parliament petitions praying upon their [illegible] this year, to declare that in their opinion no further aid at present should be granted by the Government of Canada to the Grand Trunk Railway, and that his Honor the Warden do bring the views of this Council under the notice of the Government and the Legislature by memorial, signed by the Warden on behalf of this Council, when the House meets for despatch of business."

"Mr. WOOD seconded the motion with a great deal of pleasure.

"The motion was then adopted without division."

We wonder whether, after this, Mr. Benjamin will venture to vote a new subsidy to the Grand Trunk.—Globe.

CAPT. MAURY ON THE AMERICAN AFFAIRS.

It is rarely the case that a history of the causes of the American Revolution, is heard from the South—nine-tenths of our information as to the true state of American matters come from the North, which is all on one side.

Since the outbreak, we do not remember of coming across so detailed and rational an account of the causes which led to the outbreak, from a Southern point of view, as that furnished by Captain Maury in his letter to Rear-Admiral Fitzroy, which has been published in the English papers. It has created a considerable share of interest from the causes assigned for the course pursued by the Secessionists as well as from the reputation of the writer, as a scientific and public man. He informs the Admiral that so soon as his native State, Virginia, had, "in the exercise of her high prerogative, withdrawn from the Federal Union, and called upon her sons to rally around her he could not, he did not, hesitate to obey the call and hasten to her relief."

He at once resigns his connection with the Federal Government, turns his back upon the observatory at Washington—which he quits with a "tear furrowing his cheek." This took place on the 29th of April last. He then bent his steps toward his native State, "once more a free citizen of Virginia," where he has aided to the best of his ability to defend the State from the the incursion of the "Yankees."

The extreme length of his letter prevents our transferring it to our columns, so we must content ourselves with noticing the principal points touched on by this celebrated patriot. He commences by stating that when the 13 colonies were separated from Great Britain each one was separately acknowledged and recognized as a free sovereign and independent State. That when these States formed the Federal Union they did not renounce their sovereignty—they merely delegated a portion of it, to be used by the trustee or agent—called the Federal Union, for certain fixed and definite purposes and for no other—that when Virginia entered the Union she accompanied it by an Act, stating definitely her right to withdraw from it at will—basing this right upon the principle that the people being the source of power, in delegating it the and that consequently no right or power could be abridged or cancelled by the body people could recall that power at pleasure—enjoying such delegated powers. This Act also declared that by no authority of the United States could the essential rights of the liberty of conscience and of the press, be cancelled, abridged, restrained or modified. He thus alludes to the causes of the severance of the Union. "But the real difficulty and the causes out of which it has sprung, are old and deep seated. They are partly physical, partly industrial, partly social, and partly political: they have been cumulative. The physical consists in the fact that the North being a manufacturing people, and the South an agricultural, the individual interests of each require the advocacy of very different measures of political economy. Thus the South, having the raw material to dispose advocated the free admission of manufactured goods from abroad. Whilst the North depending largely upon manufactures for its prosperity, favored a protective tariff for its manufactures. Portions of the North found forming very unprofitable, and attention is turned to the sea—this also proving unprofitable, induced the application to Congress for assistance to catch fish, urging as a reason that the fishing business fostered a sort of school for seamen which must be beneficial to the Government in the event of a war. A bounty was paid out of the public treasury annually, on American caught fish, which kept others from the market, and this tax coming chiefly, as Captain Maury affirms, out of the Agricultural industry at the South, constitutes grievance No. 1.

Captain Maury says that the war of 1812 was undertaken to protect Northern interests, and to vindicate the commercial rights of New England. With the parade there arose a school of protectionists who advocate the interests of New England's workshops, and the high tariff put on articles of foreign manufacture, had to be paid by the self-sustaining South. This is grievance No. 2.

Washington had warned the American people (as Captain Maury asserts) against the danger of dividing the country geographically into sections. And for two generations the Administration had acted upon the advice. But the Yankees, about 30 years ago getting rich and inflated, were determined to overthrow the policy heretofore pursued, of having a slave and a free State united together into the Union. Having in an unoccupied quantity of wild lands they formed the plan of bringing it largely into the market and inducing the grants from Europe to come over and occupy it—declaring at the same time that Southerners settling there would have their slaves confiscated, and so by an act of the sovereign people disposing of the public lands in such immense quantities, and its rapid settlement by hordes of foreigners, the slave States lost their balance in the Union, and their prestige with same. Whilst the number of slave and free States remained equal, the Southerners considered that in the Senate at all events they possessed an effectual check to Northern rapacity. With the progress of population and increase of free States as was manifested in last November election, perished their last hope of fair play from the Union. And they anxiously enquire what part have we in the Union or inheritance in Abraham Lincoln?—to your tents O Southerners. The cry is taken up by South Carolina, and rolls along till 13 States reiterate it. The policy of landsettling by freemen, and forbidding the introduction of slaves in new territory forms grievance No. 3, and may safely be termed the gravamen—the chief cause of the Secession. Captain Maury has a fling at President Lincoln for his suspending the writ of habeas corpus—muzzling the press and abridging the freedom of speech, and above all for his plunging the country into a war, murdering Southern citizens, burning their houses and wasting their substance. He shows the righteousness of the Southern cause, its superiority in the calibre of its soldiers—as well as the objects for which they are fighting—the resources at command, and the ability they possess to defend themselves against Northern invasion, and closes his letter by an allusion to the State of Pennsylvania, from its geographical position and facilities if it will but join the Southern Confederacy, nothing would prevent it becoming the Birminghams, the Sheffields, and Liverpools of the South. Such a course would not only open up a prospect of future greatness and prosperity, but would enable that State to escape its share of the tax consequent upon the war at the North amounting to $500,000,000.

Whatever may be the legal opinion of the right of Secession, Captain Maury, in common with his Southern friends, holds it as an undoubted right. A question so largely acknowledged and acted upon, at the same time so persistently denied, may safely be considered as not settled yet.

☞ We observe from our exchanges that the Government has sent writs to the Sheriffs of Counties where the municipalities therein have been defaulters in the amount due to the Municipal Loan Fund, and quite a number are in this unenviable position. The balance due by this Municipality was consolidated by the act of last session, and the Commissioners not being able to dispose of the Debentures, took steps at once and raised the money and had it deposited in time to save legal enforcement. Peterborough has never repudiated its debts, and we think we are safe in saying it never will. Some time ago an envenomed scribbler, not one hundred miles away, sent a statement abroad that the Town of Peterborough, owing to the stagnation of the lumber trade consequent upon the American war, was upon the brink of ruin. Such a report was as false as it was malicious, and any person from a distance stopping with us but for a few days, could at any period since have rebutted it. At present though feeling the effects of a curtailment of business with the Americans, we can bear a favourable comparison with any Town in Canada of its size for the amount of general business done in it and the circulation of cash—not treasury notes or shin plasters, but notes of specie paying Banks, and gold and silver as well. Our credit stands deservedly high, and we mistake much the calibre of our leading men if they are not determined to maintain its character for promptly meeting its engagements and for its solvability.

Most of our saw-mill men are getting out logs, and there are quite a number making square timber in the rear townships, which timber must find its way past our Town. Our markets are well supplied and our farmers get a ready sale for all their produce. Prices, it is true, are not high, but equally good, if not better than any locality similarly situated. Our volunteers are punctual in their attendance on drill, and are learning fast. Our grist-mills are busy manufacturing flour. Our splendid river flows on towards the ocean as it has done for centuries, and we congratulate ourselves as having a "goodly heritage among the nations."

TOWN COUNCIL.

Monday, 3rd Feb., 1862.

Council met. His Worship the Mayor presiding.

Present—Messrs. Chamberlen, Hughes, Reid, Dickson, Stevenson, Toole, Maloney, Ryan and Bradfield.

The Mayor stated to the Council that on the 23rd of last month the Sheriff had served a writ upon the Town Treasurer for the balance (some £600) due to the Municipal Loan Fund, which amount had been consolidated. The Commissioners had raised the amount and paid it in, and it was deposited to the credit of the Receiver General on the 22nd ultimo, and that the Treasurer had the Receiver General's receipt for the amount due on the 25th January.

Applications from Robert Stenson, for Inspector of Licenses, and from R. T. Brookes, for Inspector of Buildings, were referred to the Committee on appointments to office.

A petition from Patrick Phelan, asking the Council for assistance was referred to the Committee on Charities.

An account from A. E. Baker, for $8 75c was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The Finance Committee reported recommending payment of several accounts, and stating that the account of Wm. Cumming had been laid over for further consideration.

A motion to re-consider the appointment of the Standing Committees was lost.

On motion of Mr Bradfield, seconded by Mr Stevenson, it was ordered that the sum of $20 be placed in the hands of the Mayor for distribution in Charities.

The Council then adjourned till Monday evening next, at 7 o'clock.

COMMENDABLE GENEROSITY.—At a social Congregational meeting held in the First Presbyterian Church; Peterborough, on Monday evening last, the pastor, Rev. Mr. Roger, brought up the case of Mrs. Baptie, of Smith, whose daughter was so frightfully mangled in an accident, by her clothes coming in contact with a threshing machine, some time ago. The unfortunate young woman is still living, but her life is despaired of. Her mother has struggled on, with stinted resources, for their subsistence, but public assistance is now necessary for their further support. A collection was taken up, and over $60 was subscribed by persons present. Such generosity is truly commendable.

FROM NORTH MONAGHAN.

During the evenings of Monday and Tuesday the Town Hall was turned into a laboratory, with Professor Kent presiding, who lectured under the auspices of the Intellectual Improvement Society. His first lecture on Electricity and Galvanism was accompanied with numerous experiments made by a Double Acting Electric Machine with Leyden Battery and Bell. His second lecture was on Chemistry, with experiments by means of the air pump, burning iron, steel, &c., in oxygen gas, light produced thereby, with numerous other experiments, which occupied upwards of two hours. His lectures gave the greatest satisfaction, and for the first time an opportunity was offered many of seeing exemplified those principles so frequently brought under their notice both in the School-room and at the Town Hall.

Mr. Kent's method of lecturing is clear and easy of comprehension. To the great amusement of the audience a balloon ascension was exhibited at the termination of the last lecture.

☞ Spring Wheat is selling in Lindsay at 3s 9d per bushel; Fall Wheat from 4s to 4s 3d. Messrs Clarkson & Dundas are the principal buyers.

☞ CHORAL SOCIETY.—We are requested to announce that a meeting of the Choral Society will be held in their usual place of meeting, this evening, at 8 o'clock.

THE FIELD BATTERY.

At the meeting on Saturday the following gentlemen were nominated as officers: Messrs. Travers, Wickham, Hall, R. Taylor, Geo. Eason, Capt. Sutherland, and M. Clementi.

Messrs Hulme and Gilbert were nominated, but declined.

The gentlemen elected were
G N Travers, Esq—1st Lieutenant.
James Hall, jr., " —2nd "
H Wickham, " —3rd "

DRILL.

36 of the officers and men of the Battery met for drill on Tuesday evening. It was the first time most of the men had ever been in the ranks. Colonel Haultain and Sergeant Lance—two well-qualified officers—gave the instructions.

The nights of meeting have been changed: Tuesdays and Thursdays are now appointed. After drill to-night the question of uniform will come up for consideration.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT.

We learn that a shocking accident occurred in the Township of Dummer last week. David Quinlan had been taking a load of straw from one place to another, when on coming to where he wished to empty the load he carelessly threw off the pitch-fork, which struck the ground and rebounded, prongs forward, entering the body of Quinlan. At last accounts his life was despaired of. This is another sad consequence of the careless use of dangerous implements.—Many accidents have happened before in the same way, yet persons will daily expose themselves to the great danger. Caution is almost useless, for little heed is taken of it.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.

We are requested to remind the public that the Anniversary Tea Meeting of the Peterboro Baptist Church and Sabbath School will be held this (Thursday) evening, at 6¼ o'clock. Rev John Alexander, of Brantford, Rev H. Lloyd, of Whitby, and several of the resident ministers, will address the meeting.

Also, that on Sabbath next two sermons will be preached by Rev Mr Alexander, at 10½ a. m., and 6 p. m.

THE GENESEE FARMER.—The February number of this well-known agricultural journal is received. As we have often said before the Farmer is the cheapest and one of the very best agricultural and horticultural papers published. It costs only 50 cents a year, and we see by this number that the publisher offers some exceedingly liberal premiums to all who subscribe for the paper at this time. Specimen copies of the paper are sent free to all applicants. Address JOSEPH HARRIS, Rochester, N. Y.

THE ROYAL ADELPHI DRAMATIC TROUPE

Closed a season of eleven days here, on Tuesday evening. No entertainment has ever had such success in this Town before, and nothing of the kind has ever better deserved it. It is unnecessary for us to say anything further than we have said as to the character of the Company. They are superior artists, and the manager, Mr. Keller, is a gentleman.

We believe it is the intention of the Company to again visit this place for a stay of two or three days on their return from Lindsay, whether they have gone.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—In the last number of your valuable paper a Statement, from Thomas White, Jr., Treasurer to the Board of School Trustees for the Town of Peterboro', for 1861, which gives no satisfactory statement in detail. Please can you inform the Ratepayers how the business is conducted in the School Board, and you will confer a favor by so doing on a majority of the Ratepayers.

A RATEPAYER.

February 6th, 1862.

[If our correspondent will state more explicity what he means we will answer. We suppose "A Ratepayer," in common with other rate-payers, wonders how it is that there is an allowance for Secretary's salary made, when the law expressly forbids that officer receiving any remuneration for his services, while he is a member of the Board. —ED. EX.]

....The Montreal Pilot of Wednesday evening says:—"Travelling by rail and otherwise is very bad both to the east and west of Montreal. The Grand Trunk is daily behind time, and we understand that the breakage of wheels and other iron works is very serious. The Lachine Railway had a breakdown this morning, and the first train due here at 9 a. m., only reached the Bonaventure terminus at half-past 11. We understand that other roads are not better off."

[illegible] to Prince Albert will soon be starting at Longford, Shropshire and Staffordshire.

"LAWFUL GOVERNMENTS" AGAIN.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—My friend C. S. D. is out upon me in your last issue for opposing his views on Governments, and considers that the views which I hold are unsound, untenable, and contrary to Scripture. On the other hand, I consider your correspondent precisely in that position which he thinks I am in; and I am strengthened in this conviction from his last communication, and my feelings after reading it were those of regret that a person so well versed and read in Scripture and History should hold opinions so adverse to the Word of God. It would not be a difficult matter to go over seratim C. S D.'s proposition and refute them, along with the writers he quoted from, who express, as he says, his own views; but this would take up too much of your space, and render the discussion too tedious to be profitable. I shall therefore confine my observations to a few general heads, and propound a few queries for C. S. D. to answer. In my former communication I intimated that I considered no authority of any value to prove what is the nature of that Government to which we are enjoined to render obedience to but the Bible, and in reading C. S. D.'s reply I was pleased to find that he set out determined to "disprove from the Bible alone the Scripturality of my principal position." He commences well; quotes a number of passages that proves the "Scripturality" of my position. In one place he makes a quotation as follows: "Holiness becometh 'his institution' for ever."—referring by the words he supplies to the institution of Government. Surely C. S. D. is aware that but among one people who a theocracy ever established and that people though highly favored, were not satisfied with that form of Government, and clamoured long and loud for a king, so as to be like other nations; and a king they got, but with their king they often rebelled against the legitimate ruler, and so reaped the penalty. The quotation is from the Psalms, and has nothing to do with human Governments. It is as follows: "Holiness becometh thy house, O Lord, for ever."—By endeavoring to prove that holiness becomes the Governments to whom allegiance alone is due, he has defeated his object entirely, and the character of the Government, or nature of the power he fancies demanding obedience, is such that is nowhere to be found. It is certain that no such powers existed when the commands were given to obey them. The author of the Christian religion taught all men to "render to Cæsar the things that were Cæsar's;" his apostles invariably taught the same, and the numerous passages quoted by C. S. D. all go to prove the duty of Christians yielding obedience to the powers that were. They spoke in the present tense of the then reigning tyrants—persecuting magistrates; they nowhere left it to individual opinion or choice as to what form of Government they should obey, or what oppose. They, despite of C. S. D. and his false reasoning, as well as that of the authors he quotes, were to yield passive obedience to the powers then over them, not only for wrath but for conscience sake. There is only one exception to this general rule, and that is when the rulers enter the pale of conscience; then they are to be disobeyed, even to the sacrifice of life itself. When the apostles were commanded not to teach or preach any more in the name of Jesus, they replied: "Whether it be right to harken unto you more than unto God, judge ye." In all other cases Christians are to submit. Look at Paul when exhorting slaves: "Be obedient unto your masters, rendering service unto them as unto the Lord. Art thou a servant, (slave) care not for it; but if thou mayest be free, use it rather." When Christians were persecuted in one city their divine master exhorted them to flee into another; no where does He or His Apostles enjoin obedience only to "moral" Governments; such Governments were not to be found. Will C. S. D. say that our Government is such a Government as he terms "God's moral ordinance"? What does he say of that hateful statute enforcing church rates from dissenters in England? What of the wicked war with China, because the Chinese refused payment for an article forced upon them in defiance of their own laws? To say nothing more of many doings of our Government that will not bear scrutiny by the standard of Divine truth. And the oth r country which C. S. D. admits is an ordinance of God—the Northern States of America—just let us step across the lines and fancy ourselves citizens. We know that the liberty of speech and of the press are birthrights of Americans. Where are they now? Has not the Government exercised its powers to suppress all papers that dare express a sentiment contrary to it and in favor of the South. These inalienable rights are nowhere enjoyed in the Federal States. And with such a tyrannical arbitrary rule, equal only to that of Austria, would my friend acknowledge that this Government was an ordinance of God? Would he call that a holy Government which so systematically during this war has set God's command to observe the Sabbath day at naught, or the other "lawful" Government who in anticipation only of war openly disregarded the same command. I should like very much if C. S. D. would name this Governments that he thinks Christians are bound to obey. He has mentioned two; he surely will include more as the ordinance of God. Which are they? If not, the missionaries who instruct their converts must teach them to obey and pray only for those that are "God's moral institutions." Does my friend want to be reminded that this world is all wrong in its moral machinery—that the Saviour came to restore it by bringing men to obey God—that He has said, "My Kingdom is not of this world,"—and even in His House, in His Church, have not His people manifested a spirit unworthy of their Great Master. No Government such as C. S. D. and his authors imagine has existed or will exist, till the millennium comes; and consequently, there can be no possibility of fairly setting aside the Apostolic injunction of obedience to the powers that be, nor of evading the fact that the powers that be are ordained of God; there is no power but of God:" Therefore, if you are under a power you do not like, leave it if you can; if not, obey it in all civil matters,—pray for it, and do all you can as a good citizen to improve it. The passages quoted by C. S. D. from the Bible prove, positively, the duty of obedience to the powers there in existence, and a positive statement that such powers were of God, and ordained by God. I take my stand here; my case is already made out; I adhere to the teachings and practices of the first teachers of Christianity If they are wrong and not to be understood as they wrote upon this point, they may not be studied upon other points. If C. S. D. maintains the contrary still, he must prove his case, which he has not yet done,—not by drawing upon his own imagination, or from the lore of sisters, but from the unerring standard of Divine truth. I fear, Mr. Editor, your patience against the more of the Southern spirit of [illegible] than they in dreams of.

ALLANDALE UNION HALL.

MR. EDITOR:—Knowing that your columns are always ready to give space for anything interesting, I write you these few lines.

At our annual School Meeting for the year 1861 a rate-payer objected to the School-house being used on Sundays as a place of Religious Worship, saying it was an imposition on the public so to use it. Seeing the prospect before us of being deprived of hearing the Word of God explained in this village, our worthy neighbor Wm. Wood, sr., (who is ever ready to lend a helping hand to his fellow men) started a subscription list, which in a short time amounted to a considerable sum towards a new hall, for the purpose of religious and social meetings. I need scarcely add that the object was successful beyond expectation. A building was erected, of which Allandale may well be proud.

The hall, after being completed, and called by the name of Union Hall (very appropriately) was opened for public worship on Sunday, 26th ult., by Rev. Mr. Fowler preaching in the morning, Rev. Mr. Andrews in the afternoon, and Rev. Mr. Carrol in the evening. At each of these services the building was well filled.

On the following morning the villagers were all on the more making preparations for a Soiree intended to be held that evening in the basement or lower story of the hall,—the upper part having been set apart for religious worship. As the evening drew near a large number of visitors arrived from all directions, and as on other occasions there was no scarcity of the fair sex to add pleasure to the social company. When the hour arrived over 300 persons partook of the good things provided, three tables having to be set, before all were accommodated. After the repast the gathering met in the upper room, where Thos. Short, Esq., occupied the chair. The chairman was supported on the right by Col. Haultain, M. P. P., and on the left by the Revs Messrs Andrews and Gilmor.

The addresses from the above-named gentlemen were highly interesting, as well as in some instances amusing, and the enjoyment was rendered complete by the introduction of several beautiful and appropriate selections of music at intervals. At a late hour the meeting was brought to a close, every one expressing their gratification at what had taken place.

On the following day the school and other children were entertained at a Tea Meeting in the same building, and owing to the liberality and good management with which the whole affair had been conducted, a right good cheer was also in store for them, and there seemed to be no lack of pleasure among the juveniles.

Thus closed the opening of Union Hall, an event long to be remembered by those who were present.

It may be as well perhaps to state that the lower portion of the building is now being occupied four evenings in the week for drill instructions under the superintendence of Mr. Blake, who I am happy to state uses every exertion for the advancement of his men. The men are progressing favorably.

Fearing I have taken up too much of your space already, I will subscribe myself,

yours truly,

ARRIVAL OF THE "ANGLO SAXON."

Portland, Me., Jan. 30.

The steamship Anglo Saxon, from Liverpool on the 16th, via Queenstown, 17th inst., arrived here at 10.45, this morning. Her dates are five days later than those already received.

The steamship Teutonia, from New York, arrived at Liverpool on the 15th instant.

It was rumored that the rebel steamer Nashville had been sold to English shipowners. The Tuscarora continued to blockade her.

Flour had declined 6d to 1s. Wheat declined 1d to 2d. Corn easier. Market closed steady and with an upward tendency for wheat. Provisions quiet. Consols for money 93¼.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The financial writers in the English journals indulged in all sorts of gloomy forbodings for America, under the suspension of specie payments. Some argue that the issue of inconvertible paper may be expected to render the country more than ever a prey to social disorganization and jobbery.

The steamer Adelaide, from Cork, with a regiment on board for Canada, had put back to Plymouth Sound from stress of weather.

The frigate Warrior was expected at Plymouth in a day or two on her way to the North American station.

But little business was doing at Lloyd's in war risks.

There was continued activity in all the departments of the Portsmouth dock yard.

The Federal gunboat Tuscarora and the rebel steamer Nashville remained in statu quo at Southampton. It was stated that the Tuscarora's movement in leaving her moorings on the 13th inst., was to prevent the Nashville from getting under way for twenty-four hours.

It was understood that the Tuscarora's orders were never to loose sight of the Nashville—to blockade her in Southampton, and if she should leave to chase her as long as she is at sea.

In addition to the frigate Dauntless, the war steamer Argus has been placed at the mouth of the Southampton docks to watch the movements of the two vessels.

A report said that the Nashville had been sold to an English ship owner.

The London Times says mercantile letters from New York represent that the cry for promoting insurrection among the slaves was gaining force, and looking at the threatened horrors, whispers were at length heard of a wish that, for the sake of humanity, European intervention might be found practicable.

Additional correspondence had been published in regard to the Trent affair, including Lord John Russell's reply to Mr. Seward's despatch, dated Jan. 12. It expresses much satisfaction at the conclusion arrived at by the Washington Government, which it considers most favourable to the maintenance of most friendly relations.—The English Government, however, differ from Mr. Seward in some of his conclusions, and as it may lead to a better understanding on several points of international law, Lord John Russell proposes in a few days to write another despatch on the subject. In the meantime, he says, it is desirable that the commanders of United States cruisers shall be instructed not to repeat acts for which the British Government will have to ask redress and which the United States Government cannot undertake to justify.

Lord Lyons is thanked for his discretion, etc.

Several members of Parliament had been addressing their constituents, and of course America was the main topic.

Mr. Gladstone, Chancellor of the Exchequer, made a speech at Leith. He was friendly towards America, and hoped the concession of the American Government would be conceived in a very generous spirit. He thought the North had undertaken a task which would prove too much for them.

Mr. Gilpin, of Northampton, declared that the lack of sympathy with the North was because the North had not identified themselves with the first principle of their constitution which declares that all men were born free and equal. But he believed the question had now become slavery for freedom. He called on England to hesitate before they directly or indirectly sanction a premature and an unnecessary acknowledgment of the South.

Lord Henley at the same meeting uttered similar sentiments. He said they must not think of their pockets. In order to get cotton they must not go to war and defend the Southern Confederacy.

Mr. Bernard Hope took rather opposite ground. He believed if the Southern Confederacy established its independence it would lead to an amelioration of the slaves.

Mason and Slidell had been expected by the Americs, and a good deal of interest was felt as to the reception they would get at Liverpool. Various expedients were adopted to secure anything but a flattering one.

There has been no reply to the strictures on the Stone Blockade of Charleston.

Some correspondence has been produced showing that Great Britain contemplated the same thing in 1806 towards Bologne harbour.

The extra workmen at the dockyards will be discharged at the end of the financial year.

ARRIVAL OF THE "AFRICA."

New York, Jan. 31.

The Royal Mail Steamship Africa, which sailed from Liverpool at 9.30 on the 18th inst., and Queenstown on the 19th, arrived here at 9 a. m.

The Commissioners of Customs received orders to permit the free exportation of all articles against which a prohibition was recently issued.

It is reported that Earl Russell, in a response to a memorial from the Liverpool ship owners' association, relative to the stone blockade of Charleston, said he had sent dispatches in December warning the American Government against the ill feeling the proceeding would engender, and that it would lead to the opinion that the reconstruction of the Union was considered hopeless. After this design was carried out he sent another dispatch, expressing strong hopes that it would not be repeated elsewhere. It is rumored that the French and other governments were taking similar steps.

The Morning Post rejoices at the general condemnation of the act, and says that it is rousing the European Governments to a common sense of indignation, and asks why more forbearance is shown to America than was the case when Belgium was conquered, particularly as Holland was made guilty of the barbarities committed by the Washington Cabinet.

The correspondent of the Morning Herald says the Cabinet Council, yesterday, unanimously resolved to maintain the blockade of the North.

The Daily News in reviewing Mr. Seward's Trent despatch, says that, although it contains much that is questionable in law, its main positions are certainly based on acknowledged legal principles.

There is more diplomatic correspondence published, including a letter from Mr. Seward to the Secretary of the Navy, condemning in strong terms the capture of the British schooner James Campbell which was taken into New York with the British flag flying under that of the United States flag, and there is another note condemning the act of an American Commander in extracting an oath from three British seamen, captured for breach of blockade, that they would not undertake similar proceedings again. The seamen are relieved from the obligations of the oath.

It is reported that when Mr. Dayton submitted the names of twenty or thirty Americans to M. Thouvenal, for presentation to the Emperor on New Year's Day, the latter inquired as to the character of the Americans. Mr. Dayton replied that they were all eligible for presentation to the President of the United States. The result was that no Americans were presented at the Emperor's reception.

The Bourse is advanced to 69f. 50c.

In the Italian Parliament there was an interesting debate on the Roman question. Ricasoli said the destinies of Italy were ripening.

Two American Missionaries, Parker and Holmes, were massacred by Chinese rebels near Chefoo.

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.

Richardson, Spence & Co., report Flour rather firmer, but still difficult to sell at Tuesday's reduction; quotated at 24s. to 32s. Wheat in good consumptive and speculative demand, at an advance of 1d to 3d on Tuesday's rates; red western 10s 10d to 11s 4d; southern 12s 4d to 12s 6d; white western 12s 6d to 12s 9d; southern 13s to 13s 3d. London, January 19.

The Observer suggests the expediency of an intervention of France and England between the Federals and Confederates, and says that such an act would be approved of by the whole world.

The Persia was at Liverpool on the 18th and the Niagara at Queenstown on the 19th.

The Spanish Government having ordered the Sumter to leave Cadiz, she has gone to Gibraltar.

PARIS, Jan. 19.

The Journal des Debats thinks that Lord Palmerston's intentions towards the United States are not pacific.

The Temps, in announcing Mason and Slidell's expected arrival at Havre, says that no obstacle will be offered for the fulfilment of their mission to France and England, that they will be allowed to plead for the recognition of the South.

The Press says that the French Government will receive neither Mason nor Slidell, nor any other Southern Commissioner.

The Pays says that the Government of Ecuador requested the mediation of England in Peru. England accepted the office.

The Independence Belge says that France will assume the initiative in the remonstrance against the blockade of the Southern ports England will only afford her moral support.

It is reported that fresh negociations have been opened between Austria and Hungary.

Garibaldi refused to accept the Presidency of the National Society of Providements.

The Monitour says that the number of partizans in England for the recognition of the Southern Confederacy is increasing.

THE TRENT CASE.

OFFICIAL DESPATCH FROM EARL RUSSELL TO LORD LYONS.

"Earl Russell to Lord Lyons, "Foreign Office, Jan. 11.

"My Lord,—In my despatch to you of the 30th of November, after informing you of the circumstance which had occurred in relation to the capture of the four persons taken from on board the Trent, I stated to you that it then appeared it certain individuals had been forcibly taken from on board a British vessel, the ship of a neutral Power, while such vessel was pursuing a lawful and innocent voyage, an act of violence which was an affront to the British flag and a violation of international law. I concluded by directing you, in case the reparation which her Majesty's Government expected to receive should not be offered by Mr. Seward, to propose to the Minister to make such redress as alone would satisfy the British nation, namely,—first, the liberation of the four gentlemen taken from on board the Trent, and their delivery to your Lordship in order that they might again be placed under British protection; secondly, a suitable apology for the aggression which had been committed. I received yesterday your despatch of the 27th ult., enclosing a note to you from Mr Seward, which is in substance the answer to my despatch of the 30th of November. Proceeding at once to the main points in discussion between us,—Her Majesty's Government have carefully examined how far Mr. Seward's note and the conduct it announces complies satisfactorily with the two proposals I have recited. With regard to the first, viz., the liberation of the prisoners with a view of their being again placed under British protection, I find that the note concludes by stating that the prisoners will be cheerfully liberated, and by calling upon your Lordship to indicate a time and place for restoring them. No condition of any kind is coupled with the liberation of the prisoners. With regard to the suitable apology which the British Government had a right to expect, I find that the Government of the United States distinctly and unequivocally declares that no directions had been given to Capt. Wilkes or to any other naval officer to arrest the four persons named, or any of them, on the Trent, or on any other British vessel, or any other neutral vessel, at the place where it occurred or elsewhere. I find further that the Secretary of State expressly forbears to justify the particular act of which Her Majesty's Government complained. If the United States Government had alleged that although Captain Wilkes had no previous instructions for that purpose, he was right in capturing the persons and the four prisoners, and in thereby thus detaining the Trent on board his own vessel, he (the other claim thereby) into a place of the United States, the Government which had then sanctioned the proceedings of Captain Wilkes would have become responsible for the original violence and insult of the act. But Mr. Seward contents himself with stating that what has happened has been simply an inadvertency, consisting in a departure by a naval officer, free from any wrongful motive, from a rule uncertainly established, and probably, by the parties concerned either imperfectly understood or entirely unknown. The Secretary of State goes on to affirm that for this error the British Government has a right to expect the same reparation which the United States, as an independent State, should expect from Great Britain, or from any other friendly nation in a similar place. Her Majesty's Government having carefully taken into their consideration, the liberation of the prisoners, the delivery of them into your hands, and the explanations to which I have just referred, I have arrived at the conclusion that they constitute the reparation which Her Majesty and the British Nation had a right to expect. It gives her Majesty's government great satisfaction to be enabled to arrive at a conclusion favorable to the maintenance of the most friendly relations between the two nations. I need not discuss the modifications in my statement of facts which Mr. Seward says he has derived from the reports of officers of his government. I cannot conclude however, without adverting shortly to the discussions which Mr. Seward has raised upon points not prominently brought into question in my despatch of the 30th November. I there objected on the part of Her Majesty's government to that which Captain Wilkes had done. Mr. Seward, in his answer, points out what he conceives Capt. Wilkes might have done without violating the law of nations. It is not necessary that I should here discuss in detail the five questions ably argued by the Secretary of State, but it is necessary that I should say that Her Majesty's government differ from Mr. Seward in some of the conclusions at which he has arrived, and it may lead to a better understanding between the two nations on several points of International Law, which may during the present contest or at some future time be brought into question, that I should state to you for communication to the Secretary of State wherein those differences consist. I hope to do so in a few days. In the mean time it will be desirable that the Commanders of the United States cruisers should be instructed not to repeat acts for which the British Government will have to ask for redress and which the United States Government cannot undertake to justify.

You will read and give a copy of this despatch to the Secretary of State.

I am, &c.,

(Signed) RUSSELL.

PROSPECTUS OF THE "Scottish American Journal."

A FIRST CLASS FAMILY NEWSPAPER DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF SCOTCHMEN IN AMERICA, AND TO THE DISSEMINATION OF SCOTTISH LITERATURE AND NEWS.

FIFTH YEAR.

ON January 2nd, 1862, was commenced a new volume (V.) of the Scottish American Journal; and in future the numbers issued between the first and last days of each year will constitute a complete volume, of convenient size for binding; and each number will contain a most entertaining and instructive repertory of reading matter, calculated to interest all readers of British origin. The Scottish American Journal, though decidedly international in its constant efforts to promote peace and prosperity between the people of Great Britain and America, is yet emphatically Scottish in its copious records of all events occurring in Scotland that can be regarded of the least interest to natives of that country residing in America; and to this "news from home" is added, weekly a summary of general intelligence from England, Ireland, and other parts of the world.

A distinguishing feature of the Scottish American Journal is its regular re-publication—verbatim et literatim—of the "leading articles" of the prominent British newspapers and other periodicals upon the most important topics of the day. This feature is a unique one, and has been found very acceptable to the people of British North America, as it supplies a long needed desideratum in the Provinces. In reference to the "editorials" of the Scottish American Journal, it is a significant fact that the British press frequently acknowledges their intrinsic truth and force by copiously extracting from our columns and declaring that the Scottish American Journal is the most able and interesting paper published in America. A concise weekly summary is also given of the principal items of American news, and a similar narrative of events transpiring in the various British Provinces, the latter feature supplying a deficiency which was felt in several of the Provinces for intelligence as to what was transpiring in other parts of the British possessions.

In the forthcoming volume of the Scottish American Journal increased space will be devoted to the literary department in the publication of serial tales and sketches, vividly illustrating the customs, habits, sentiments and general characteristics of the people of Scotland each tale emanating from the pen of an author of celebrity. As hereofore, particular care will be exercised in the choice of original poetry, composed by writers of acknowledged genius and purity of thought, resident here or abroad. The first number of the new volume contained the commencements of a deeply interesting tale, entitled

THE LIEUTENANT & HIS SON.

This tale will prove to be one of the most interesting ever published, and will be appreciated by all classes of readers.

Agricultural

CALVING.

The following extract from a Prize Essay on the "Rearing of Calves," by [illegible] published in the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society, (Eng.) is appropriate to the season:

"The wealth and condition of the cow is [illegible] greatly influenced by the quantity of milk [illegible] secreted, and the [illegible] produced by the first milking after calving. Colostrum, or first milk, is more purgative than that of any subsequent period, and is therefore better suited to the wants of the young animal. Besides, the udder and teats, which have become distended and hard during the latter months of pregnancy, are relaxed and softened by the first milking, and the calf can suck more easily. Colostrum is therefore the natural food of the young animal, and should be allowed to it for at least three days after birth. Nature has provided it for this purpose, and it is not to be supposed that she has done so without a wise object. Its aperient quality is evidently intended to clear away the meconium, or first excrement of the young animal, which is of a very tenacious nature, and which, if not removed, would cause great pain and inconvenience. Besides, the first milk is more nutritious than that which is secreted afterwards, and is therefore better suited to the weak digestive organs of the young animal. Lastly, it is probable that the first milk is more stimulating

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.
THIS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made one accordingly; there have been completed the present large number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to the guests. The whole of the beds have, at great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRESSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the comfort, THE ALBION is to say the least of it, still continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half House in Canada.

Poetry.

A SKATING SONG.

On long, long nights of winter,
Upon our inland seas,
Our flashing skat-steel rivals
The swiftness of the breeze;
Once more our course we venture
On the rapid gliding keel,
And proudly sweep our mickey deep,
With many a curve and wheel.
Hurrah for the flashing, forward dashing,
Clearly ringing steel.

We need no gas nor parlor,
Stars for our lamp suffice;
Our canopy is the Heaven blue,
Bent round the glassy ice.
Hurrah for the brave old Norsemen!
Hurrah for the steel shod keel!
O'er the deep we skim, till shores grow dim,
Then a homeward course we wheel,
Hurrah for the flashing, forward dashing,
Clearly ringing steel!

Steel for the sturdy warrior,
Steel for the editor's pen,
The pioneer's axe in the forest,
The plo-share in the glen.
But hurrah for the steel of the skaters;
Hurrah for the Joy we feel!
When our skates are glancing, like a vessel dancing,
With a wave-dividing keel!
Hurrah for the flashing, forward dashing,
Clearly ringing steel!

The Widow's Trial.

During the wanderings of my earlier days in Europe, I visited the ancient city of Hereford, a place remarkable for its picturesque beauty, its order-loving and intelligent people, and its numerous charitable institutions, established and endowed by the benevolent, centuries ago. It is adorned by many ancient and sacred edifices. It can also boast of being the birth-place of the famous actor, David Garrick. With what feeling of curiosity I gazed upon the house in which this great English Roscius first appeared on the stage of life. There is a strange imaginary halo which Fancy weaves around even inanimate objects, when connected with genius.

I had just finished a survey of the fine old cathedral——one of those magnificent, stupendous structures, which stand as monuments of the architectural skill of past ages, when I was informed that the assize term had just commenced in the County Court, so I concluded to vary my recreation by passing an hour there. To a student of human nature, a criminal court affords much matter for reflection; he can there mark the varied shades of character. I entered the court and took my place among the spectators. The preliminaries incidental to the opening of the court were passed through, and the first prisoner on the calendar was called to appear at the bar. The crier called in a stentorian voice, "Silence in Court!" when a poor, wretched-looking woman appeared, moving toward the rail, which her trembling hands grasped for support. After a moment or two, she raised her eyes imploringly towards the Judge, Baron Williams, and in a tremulous voice exclaimed—

"Oh, my lord, be merciful to me, for the sake of my poor children!"

Never have I beheld a more pitiful picture of misery, poverty and despair, than that poor woman presented, as she stood there scantily attired in worn-out widow's habiliments. Sorrow had plowed on her brow deep lines of care, and

"Sharp misery had worn her to the bone."

There she stood, arraigned before one of the highest functionaries of the crown, charged with the terrible crime of taking a little milk to satisfy the craving of her children!

The prisoner, it appeared, was a poor widow, with five small children depending on her for bread, aided only by a small pittance allowed by the parish. About ten o'clock on a certain night she was met by the principal witness against her, a farm servant, she held in her hand a small pail containing milk, and was crossing a stile in close proximity to a field, wherein were a number of milk cows belonging to the master of the servant referred to, who, concluding that she had been feloniously milking those cows, arrested her, and, in spite of all her entreaties and prayers, hurried her into the presence of the indignant farmer, who was deaf to all her cries for mercy. In his opinion the majesty of the law should be vindicated. She was soon ushered before a "capon-lined" Justice of the Peace, to whom she made a confession in the following words:

"I may as well tell the truth; I did milk a drop of milk for my children. Forgive me,—and oh! for God's sake, let me go home to my poor, hungry little ones!

But the farmer was inexorable, and the poor creature was ruthlessly dragged to the village lock-up, and on the following morning was conveyed to the county jail, a distance of twenty miles, where she had lain incarcerated for four long, dreary months. The children had been taken charge of by the parochial authorities, and the poor mother had not been permitted to see one of them during the period of her confinement.

Her trial commenced, and notwithstanding her confession before the justice, she pleaded "Not Guilty."

The first witness was the solid, sleek-looking servant, who gave his evidence with so much emphasis and air of importance as if aiding in the conviction of some terrible desperado.

Then followed the corpulent, ruddy farmer who had never felt the pangs of hunger, and probably believed it to be a fable, and the word a mere abstract term, "signifying nothing."

Next appeared the Justice, with his self-important gravity. He testified to the prisoner's confession. The case appeared to be clearly made out against the poor woman, who stood trembling with fear and dread of any further imprisonment.

"Have you any counsel engaged?" asked the judge, in a gentle tone.

"No, my lord," she replied sobbing, "I am friendless."

At the moment, a noble-looking man—Sergeant Talfourd, I think him!—rose up.

"My lord," said he, "I will undertake the prisoner's defence."

I confess I was at a loss to conceive how he could undertake a case so clearly proved, coupled with the confession, but the shrewd sagacity of the talented lawyer enabled him to penetrate deeper.

"Let the witness be called," he said with calm dignity.

The rustic soon appeared on the stand.

"Now tell me, on your oath," said the counsel, 'were there not other milk cows, the property of other farmers, in fields adjoining that belonging to your master?"

"Can you swear that the prisoner milked your master's cows."

"I think she did?"

"Can you swear she did?"

"I cannot, because I didn't see her do it."

"That will do," said the lawyer, with a smile; then turning to the jury, he delivered one of the finest impromptu, forensic speeches I have ever heard. What eloquence! What pathos! How he dilated on the sufferings of the prisoner—her long, gloomy incarceration—her separation from her children—the anguish she must have felt—the temptations in poverty, and the need of charity. His pathos touched the hearts of all present; even the Judge was moved to tears.

Then followed a scathing denunciation of the heartless farmer, who quailed and blanched beneath the burning words.

"I could not," exclaimed the orator, "repress my indignation—and I believe that every Christian man in the Court feels indignant at one of the most heartless cases of inhumanity which has ever come under my notice, and I thank God for this opportunity of pleading in behalf of this poor widow, and vindicating the credit of humanity and the honor of my country. To settle the legal bearing of the question but little need be said. The evidence is a failure and you cannot convict the prisoner—I defy you to do it! Her confession amounted to nothing. She did not say she milked the plaintiff's cows, nor can he prove that she did? Thanking you for your patience, gentlemen, I leave the case in your hands, believing you will perform your duty by acquitting the prisoner.

The counsel sat down with a look of triumph, while the court resounded with spontaneous applause. The judge, in his charge indorsed the counsel's argument, and the jury, without hesitation, pronounced their verdict—

"Not Guilty?"

Never shall I forget the joy that was portrayed on that care-worn face at the sound of those cheering words.

"You are acquitted, my poor woman, but be careful whose cows you milk in future," said the Judge, evidently pleased at the result.

On leaving the dock, she turned her eyes towards the noble-hearted man who had so eloquently defended her.

"God bless him!" she exclaimed.

"Aye, God bless him!" responded several voices among the spectators, who moved to greet the poor widow with sympathy and congratulations.

A subscription was forthwith made, and a handsome sum was put into the hands of the poor woman who hurried home with a glad, grateful and yearning heart to find and embrace her dear little ones.

A BRIEF ROMANCE.

During the vogue of Bulwer's "Paul Clifton," there appeared quite a number of romances written in the same spirit, in which rascality was delineated as united with exquisite sensibility and chivalrous sense of honor. But the mags of the great metropolis, meantime, were not idle, and one of them hit off the popular mania in the following capital sketch:

"It was the gentle hour of gloaming.—The beautiful Isabel had left her parental cot for an evening ramble. Through a green lane, redolent with honeysuckles, she bent her way to an antique wooden bridge, crossing a rivulet that murmured beneath the baronial towers, distant some half a mile from her humble, but not less happy dwelling. A mendicant who was leaning over the bridge, rose as she approached, and in a horse voice, solicited alms. Isabel had left her purse at home, or the appeal to her gentle bosom would not, perhaps, have been in vain. There was truth in the protestation that she had nothing for the man, but he could not believe it; and as she hurried to escape his importunity, he followed her with the accelerated step and heightened voice so characteristic of the determined and professional beggar. At this juncture a youth, emerging from behind a gnarled oak, and armed with a substantial walking cane, suddenly placed himself between the maiden and the vagabond, authoritatively ordering him to go about his business. The fellow grumbling sulkily obeyed. The young man, taking off his hat, respectfully made an offer to escort Isabel home, and discourteous were gratefully accepted. He was tall and dark, wearing a profusion of sabre ringlets, with moustache and a turf. The moon, which was rising over the neighboring castle tower, beamed full upon his aquiline nose, and was reflected in the lustre of his dark eye.

"Beautiful moon!" he exclaimed, "for ages on ages on this turbulent world hast thou shone down, tranquil and serene as now. And thou wilt shine on, in those unchangeable calmness, on hopes as yet unformed, on griefs untelt, on unimagined fears. Thou, oh, moon! smilest on the quiet graves, thou wilt one day smile as peacefully on us, when we are laid in the earth, and all our cares are forgotten. Is it not so?"

"Oh, yes!" answered Isabel, with much emotion.

"The youth heard a long-drawn sigh.

"'This a strange meeting,' he observed, after a pause. 'A few minutes more and we part—perhaps forever. In the meantime, may I entreat a trifling favor, which would render me extremely happy?"

"Really, sir, I—that is—very extraordinary—I could not, indeed!" stammered Isabel, blushing with an intensity actually visible in the moon-light.

"Suffer me to unpack that—fine time,"—the stranger already had—"that delicate hand, and the burden—how that delicate hand escapes from its fetters as if by magic! and then Scotland, although retaining her own customs, laws and ecclesiastical system has been, whether in peace or in war, as it were, the right hand of England.

The two countries, in their imperial relation as Great Britain, have known no separate interest or separate feelings, and Scotchmen who have gone abroad have exercised the most powerful influence in prompting love for the old country.

The Irishmen, on the other hand, notwithstanding long centuries of forcible "assimilation," in spite of a parchment Union and religious "emancipation" say, in spite of modern toleration and unbounded material liberality, still feels that he is one of a conquered people; and the fire of hatred engendered by that circumstance and former oppression, burns in the deep recesses of his heart of hearts. He clings to an antiquated and foreign creed; he is turbulent and disloyal at home, and when he goes abroad he goes as a missionary of hatred, to plant in the American States, and even in our own colonies, the poison tree of hatred to Britain and British institutions. That this does not apply to all Irishmen, I frankly and gladly admit; but it is one of the keys to the "American Difficulty;" and thus I have answered my friend's remarks upon that subject, and the value of Scotland's struggles for national and religious freedom.

A HUMBUG EXPOSED.

(From the Present Messenger.)

The press of Canada are continually exposing some new humbug in the shape of lottery swindles; and yet every week or two another comes to light. Now people must be very credulous to send money to entire strangers, not engaged in a reputable calling; and yet there must be many who do so, and in this manner encourage these swindlers in their nefarious proceedings, else they would soon change their mode of living, because it would not pay. During the past week we received a letter from "Hugh Montgomery & Co., Rockingham Hall, Plaistow, N. H.," inclosing six tickets in a scheme, said to be the "second regular monthly," but which we presume may be the hundredth "scheme" of villainy which the enterprising proprietors have started. The prospectus announces 14,000 gifts; 28,000 tickets, $2 each; "odd or even; a gift for every other ticket;" which enigmatic saying may be understood in any manner you choose.

The following extract from the circular accompanying the tickets, will show in what manner they manage to entrap the unwary:

DEAR SIR,—Thinking that you might like to try your own luck, or that you might dispose of a few tickets for our "Grand Social Levee," to take place at Rockingham Hall, Plaistow, N. H., Wednesday, February 5, 1862, we take the liberty to forward to your address, six tickets, and constitute you an agent for selling the same.

Tickets are $2 each, but we sell our agents six tickets for $10, twelve tickets for $20 and so on. If you sell this package and want more, please to order them.

All tickets remaining unsold in the hands of Agents, together with the money of those sold, must be mailed to our address, on or before the day of distribution. No tickets will be cashed in any case whatever, if the money is not mailed to us, on or before that day. This rule applies to all Agents, and must be strictly adhered to. It is not necessary that letters containing remittances should reach us on the day of distribution, but they should be mailed at the Agent's Post Office, on or before that day."

Now as they pretend to issue just 28,000 tickets at $2 each, and divide 56,000 dollars among ticket-holders, we wonder who is at the loss of the $12, which our six tickets represent? For we can assure the enterprising gentlemen that we shall neither "dispose of them," nor "pass them into the hands of some responsible friend;" for two of them are already "posted" in our sanctum as a warning to the credulous, and the others were used by our "devil" in lighting the fires of the "office!" We charge nothing for this notice; so we hope Messrs Montgomery & Co. won't conclude these tickets are paid for therewith, and send us the capital prize of $5,000!

....The Norfolk Reformer says:—"We are informed that the Rev. W. Ryerson, M. P. P. for Brant, is prostrated by sickness of a nature so tedious that his medical advisers have no hope of his being able to undertake a journey to Quebec to attend to his Parliamentary duties in the coming session."

....The Buffalo Express of Wednesday says: The most disastrous fire that our city has suffered from this winter occurred yesterday morning. In consequence of its ravages we have lost our noble St. James Hall, and one of the finest buildings in Buffalo, the St. James Hotel, has been sadly injured and defaced. The fire was discovered by a watchman, about two o'clock in the morning, appearing in the enclosed alley, or court, between the Hall and the Hotel. It and been kindled by an incendiary, in three separate places. In a basement water closet, in a pile of shavings in the alley, and in contact with some woodwork at the furthermost end of the same.

FIRE IN CAMDEN.—We learn that a fire occurred in Camden last Thursday evening by which the livery stable, kept by Mr P. Reagan, was destroyed. An unfortunate woman who had taken up quarters for midnight in the hay-loft, is supposed to have fired the premises, probably by accident—In the conflagration, the wretched woman was burned to death. Three horses perished in the flames. There was no insurance on the building or horses.

SCOTTISH NATIONALITY.

THE IRISH ELEMENT IN AMERICA.

We take pleasure in re-publishing the accompanying letter, addressed to the editor of the Glasgow Herald believing it lets daylight into a subject, which, though well understood by Scotsmen in general, is greatly misapprehended by people of other nationalities throughout America:

SIR,—Apropos of the American difficulty, and Professor Blackie's lecture upon Scottish National History and Character, how does it happen that we hear so little of the real fundamental causes of that antagonism which is so constantly cropping out in American society toward the "mother country?" Walking home with a friend from a lecture, less possessed than I am with Scottish "prejudices" (as home ideas are so generally termed now-a-days), he took occasion to express some doubts about the supposed value of the struggles referred to in the lecture as maintained by our ancestors for national, and what he choose to term ecclesiastical freedom—After all, my friend was disposed to think there was much to be said in favour of Edward Longstank's idea of a union of the island, even by force, and a subsequent unity in matters of religion; and against the antagonism that had so long characterized the two kingdoms, and still marked their ecclesiastical positions.

At the same time my companion expressed himself sorely puzzled to account for the apparent feeling of Americans towards Great Britain. He could not suppose that the temporary contest for independence could have produced a sentiment so permanent as to counterbalance the effect of original sympathies, a common language and literature, the constant influx of British emigrants, and such obvious mutual material interests. Whence, then, came the bitterness which had characterized the conduct of the Northern Americans in connection with this Trent affair? My friend has not with reference to such a subject, studied history, etc etc, or God's dealings with nations sufficiently.

I venture to answer, in substance that while all such questions possessed a variety of aspects, there was in this case one which dominated all others. That if England had succeeded in subjugating Scotland by force of arms, the Scottish people would, at the era of the Reformation, have to a certainty remained Popish. That, as it was, Ireland had, for centuries, been "England's difficulty," and, in the case supposed England would have had another "difficulty" nearer home, and just so much worse as the thistle is more trenchant than the shamrock—that, in short, the subjugation of Scotland would have ruined England; and these Islands would, perhaps, in all probability, long ago, after bloody intestine struggles, have become provinces of France or Spain. I pointed out how England and Scotland, united with the loyal portion of Ireland, had become great and powerful and free; but that, at the same time, the law of retribution had not failed—that England, and through her, Scotland were suffering the consequences of England's "Irish conquest" in former days. No doubt, centuries of subjugation and oppression were now being atoned for by just modern laws and civil liberties. But it was the Irish element in American society which created that undying hostility, by which my friend was so puzzled.

Stepping into my library, I turned his attention to a speech delivered by the Earl of Elgin, at Stirling, on the 24th of June, 1860, in which this remarkable passage appears:

"If time permitted I would undertake to show that it is owing to the successful struggle carried on under Wallace and Bruce, that the Union between Scotland and England has not only been honorable to the former country, but profitable to the latter. And a comparison of the results which have attended the connection between England and Scotland and England and Ireland, will go very far to show how little a nation gains in forcing its own foreign institutions, foreign laws, and foreign religion, upon a reluctant and high-spirited people. I fear, I greatly fear, we have not yet fully read the most valuable, but most painful lesson to its close; for, rely upon it, that if ever a collision takes place between those two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon race which dwell on opposite shores of the Atlantic, that calamity—the greatest that can befal either country—will be attributable to the humiliations which, in bygone times, England subjected Ireland. I believe, therefore, if the whole truth were to be told on this matter, we might show that what England owes to Wallace and Bruce, is only second to what Scotland herself owes to those heroes."

I pointed my friend also to a passage in a speech by Mr. Whalley, to a recent meeting of the Scottish Reformation Society, where the influence of the Irish element in American Society, where the influence of the Irish element in American society was forcibly pointed out, in its religious or Roman Catholics aspect. "This great central party," said the speaker, "on all occasions, invariably gives its influence to the candidate, whether for municipal honors or for Congress, who most roundly and soundly and inveterately abuses England." In all this, such men as Mr. Whalley fail to see that national retribution which would be obvious enough to their eyes in the cases of Russia and Poland, or Austria and Hungary. But to a Scottish eye it is as clear as the sun at noonday.

The actual union between Scotland and England was the logical result of previous events. It acknowledged and healed to Scotland's historical antecedents—once and for ever removing even a shadow for those ridiculous pretences to superiority which had so long embittered the intercourse of this two nations; and it was founded upon the toleration of their perfect equality, birthrights, privileges and immunities. The blot has been able to assail his English fellow-subjects on an equal; to speak of them as a foreign, by virtue of a long pedigree of ancestry; and to claim privileges for himself and his countrymen which he denied to others. Such was the case with Scotland when Ireland was in her state of subjugation—and such would be the case with England, if Ireland were to be subjugated.

JOHN BECKWIN'S DREAM.

Rough John Beckwin, a Mississippi ferryman, tied his boat to a post, and plodded, wet and weary, to his little house. Having thrown himself, with an oath, into a chair he lighted his pipe, and puffed the smoke up the chimney, while he dried his feet at the fire.

Presently his little daughter came in leading her younger brother, and walking up to her mother, said, with a grieved expression, "Mother, little Bub swore; little Bub can't have any wings when he dies, to fly up to the good place. Poor little Bub!" and the little girl began to cry. But the boy looked up to his mother's face, and said, "But father swore too. Can't he have any wings when he dies?"

The mother did not answer, for he feared the stern man who sat smoking his pipe by the fire.

But the iron hand had entered John Beckwin's soul. That night he dreamed; and as he stood before his cottage, looking at the stars and the moon, there was a sound of a trumpet above, that made the world tremble, and presently an exceeding glory in the sky, and from the midst of the glory a voice calling to the judgment. And immediately the air was full of white souls, whose eyes turned upward with a steady gaze, while their hands were clasped over their breasts. And the voice called again, "Come, ye blessed." Then to the white souls were given wings full of stars and shining like silver, which flashed back the glory from above, as they calmly floated upward. While he stood wondering and terrified, he heard a sharp cry of pain at his side. There stood his little boy, with ragged and soiled coat, and hands stretched piteously up toward the flying host. "O, my father," exclaimed he, "why did you teach me to do wrong?"

There was a sound as of thunder—a crash of the universe—and the old man found himself in a long train of souls, with heads bowed, and tears running from their eyes, walking down a black, iron-arched way, where he could look only before him, and see beyond the great train of weeping ones an open gate from which came fire. But he decided them not, for behind him he heard the patter of little feet, and over and anon, sighs and sobs and moans, the voice of a child, "Oh, father! why did you teach me to do wrong?"

John Beckwin awoke, and heard his little boy quietly breathing in the cot beside him. He never swore again.

THE PLAGUE OF ALMANACKS

The world is afflicted with almanacks; society and the printers are mad about almanacks. Almanacks infest one's house like paper ghosts. Everybody publishes an almanack now-a-days, everybody expects you to take what he publishes. My stationer round the corner is sure to send me in his unreadable little almanack with the first five shilling packet of flimsey cream laid that I may have been rash enough to order; my patent medicine vender wraps up my box of pills in his special version of the yearly seasons; my perfumer generously gives me his, scented with my British eau de Cologne; my illustrated newspaper has its illustrated almanack, which I am bound to buy; my comic periodical has its comic almanack; which I am also bound to buy; my insurance-office has a broad sheet which I am forced to put up in my study; four rival prophets preach woe and desolation in my ears, and I am tempted by patriotic zeal to learn what is to be the fate of my beloved country, at a cost varying from a penny to half-a-crown, while my graceless young son brings me in a handful of French trash, of which I, as a British father, can make neither head nor tail, nor can I discern any point or humour in the whole batch. Humour? Sir, the French have no humour. That poor pitiful stuff of theirs called wit is nothing but thin sour, blue-coloured claret—a very different thing to the full, rich, port-wine flavoured growth dear to Englishmen. Here is a pile of them. I will draw them at hazard. —Dickens's "All the Year Round."

HOW TO GET RICH.

An honest German, who, by picking up bones about the streets, had saved up money enough to purchase a cheap lot in the suburbs of Brooklyn, let the street as pickers and commenced as a trader——buying the scraps from the chiffoniers and selling them to the bone-black makers. He drew his bone-cart filled with bones, regularly twice a day, with his purchases. At night he would cross the ferry with his empty cart to his home—not exactly empty, however, for it always contained, at least one brick, which he was never at a loss to find in the streets of New York. His daily brick was deposited on his lot, and in the course of time old Jacob waged rich enough to think of building him a house on his lot. His bricks had, by this time, become a considerable pile, so considerable, indeed, that he actually built himself a small, snug two-story house, without being obliged to call on the brick yard for a single one. Old Jacob certainly got a cheap house, which he now resides in without a mortgage or lien upon it.

After he built his house, as he still brought his cart nightly, and was not in want of bricks, he brought over one or more cobble stones at every trip, so that by the time the street was ordered to be paved, he saved the expense of paving-stones, furnishing his stock on hand.

Now this old man thought it no sin to pick up an isolated brick or stone—for such were only proper in his eyes to take—they belonged to no one, and he took up a stray brick as he would pick up a bone out of the street. To have taken a brick from a pile, or a stone from a heap, would have been, in Jacob's eyes, stealing, and the old man would have gone home with his cart empty rather than do either. No, Jacob's house is as honest a house as any in Brooklyn.—Journal of Commerce.

A MODEL DUN.

An editor "out west" thus talks to his non-paying subscribers and patrons. Hear us for our debts, and get ready that you may pay; trust us, we are in need, and have regard for our need, as you have been long trusted; acknowledge your indebtedness, and dive into your pockets that you may promptly fork over. If there be any among you, one single patron, that don't owe us something, then to him we say—step aside; consider yourself a gentleman. If the rest wish to know why we can them, this is our answer—not that we care about the cash but our creditors do. Would you rather that we went to jail, and you so free, than you to pay your debts and keep us moving. As we agreed, we have worked for you; as we have contracted, we have furnished our paper to you; as we have promised we have waited on you; but, as you don't pay, we don you. Here are agreements for job work, contracts for subscriptions; promises for long credit, and duns for deferred payment. Who is there so green that he don't take a paper?—if any, he needn't speak—we don't mean him. Who is there so green that he don't advertise—if any, let him slide—he ain't the chap either. Who is there so mean that he don't pay the printer—if any, let him shout—for he is the man we are after. His name is Legion, and he's been owing us one, two, three, four, five and six years—long enough to make us poor, and himself rich at our expense. If the above appeal to his conscience doesn't awake him to a sense of justice, we shall have to try the law, and see what virtue there is in writs and constables.

GREEK FIRE.

This wonderful projectile, called also "liquid fire," is said to have been invented by one Bellinicus, a machinist of Heliopolis, about the 7th century, and it was used with terrific effect by the Greeks long before it became known to other nations. Though its exact elements, and their proportions, can now be a matter of conjecture merely, it is reasonable to suppose that naphtha, pitch, and sulphur were some of its principal ingredients. It was usually kept in jars or bottles, and could be propelled, in its fluid state, from the prows of ships, and from fortifications with as much precision as water is now thrown from a fire-engine. The moment it was exposed to the air it ignited and became a continuous stream of fire, carrying with it excruciating torture and inevitable destruction. Unlike any other combustible, water increased rather than diminished its power; it could only be extinguished by vinegar, or stifled by sand; while to its other horrors were added a dense smoke, a loud report, and a most disgusting smell. Being thrown on the flesh of wounds, and into decayed places, it ignited whatever it came in contact with, and, unfortunately, the harder it was driven, the deeper it ate, even dipped into the head vinegar. Some in these days threw concentrated

....Sumner, in his recent speech at Washington on the Trent question, thus spoke of England and its institutions:—

"Great Britain throughout her municipal history, has practically contributed to the establishment of freedom beyond all other nations. There are at least seven institutions or principles which she has given to civilization; first, the trial by jury, second, the writ of habeas corpus; thirdly, the freedom of the press, fourthly, bills of rights, fifthly, the representative system; sixthly, the rules and order of debate; and seventhly, the principle that the air is too pure for a slave to breathe—long ago declared, and first made a reality by British law. No other nation can show such peaceful triumphs.

....The Hon. M. H. Foley, M. P. P. for Perth, intends to spend a few days among his constituents previous to the meeting of Parliament. He will be in Stratford on Monday next, and in St. Mary's and Blanshard on Tuesday and Wednesday. From this point he will proceed, by way of Mitchell, to the Northern townships. His numerous personal and political friends throughout the county will receive the announcement with pleasure and give Mr. Foley a hearty welcome. He says he intends addressing his constituents there and elsewhere, and will be happy to meet them.

A SCOTTISH VIEW OF THE INTERNATIONAL POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES.

(From the Glasgow Herald.)

We have become so well accustomed to American bluster and assumption, that talk of the very "tallest" kind has ceased to surprise us; until at length we look for arrogant nonsense in the columns of American journals, and in the speeches of stump orators, just as naturally as we look for snow in the winter or swallows in the summer season. Common sense, in fact, has become a rara avis in the literature and oratory of that distracted country; and we verily believe that a sober and sensible Yankee, at the present time, would be as great a curiosity among his countrymen as the tinker was to his tribe when he distinguished himself in a clean shirt. There is not a virtue under the sun that Americans have not coolly appropriated as peculiarly their own; and if they were only half so good and great as they pretend to be, other nations would have good reason to hide their pitiful lights when contrasted with the g'ore of this powerful Western luminary. For many years past we have borne with commendable patience the manifold taunts and odious comparisons of these go-a-head cousins of ours; and, to all appearances, the more we bear, the greater grows their inclination to heap opprobrious epithets upon us. Since the commencement of the secession movement in the States, we have been content to believe that this unwarrantable abuse and ridiculous assumption of extraordinary qualities were confined to the columns of the "rowdy" papers and the palavers of "rowdy" politicians; but recent events have opened our eyes considerably, for we find that Ministers of State can "stump" and swagger as well as the most reckless "rowdy" from Massachusetts to Missouri.

In the Seward and Russell correspondence regarding the admission of the United States as a party to the declaration at Paris, the American Secretary of State, in a despatch to Mr. Adams, the United States Minister in London, makes the following statement, which appears to be the most perfect specimen of diplomatic impudence that we have seen for a very long time:—"The policy of the American Government," says Mr. Seward, "is one that is based on interest of the greatest importance, and sentiments of the highest virtue; while the policy of foreign States rests on ephemeral interests of commerce, or of ambition merely." Now, if ever there was an illustration of Satan reproving sin, assuredly it is the case when an American Minister taxes foreign nations with ambition and an immoderate love of trade. It is a well-known fact that, for more than forty years, the Washington Government has steadily pursued a gigantic system of aggression; and to this ambitious spirit the Union owes the Mexican war, the filibustering attempts on Cuba and Nicaragua, the Oregon and San Juan disputes with Great Britain, and the clandestine attempts to revive the slave trade, which have brought American institutions and statesmen into disgrace in the estimation of the civilized world. The Monroe doctrine of "America for the Americans" has long been a waking dream with imaginative politicians and unreasoning multitudes. A magnificent dominion, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans, and from Greenland to Patagonia, was the avowed object of insatiable ambition; and yet we find men, big with schemes of conquest in the way of working out these ideas, moralising on the depravity and pride of foreign nations.

When we turn to the question of slavery and the slave trade, and compare the policy consistently pursued by this country in relation thereto, and the policy which the United States have invariably maintained, it will then be seen whether Great Britain or America deserves the greatest condemnation in their dealings with the down-trodden African race. Most of the Northern States were at one time in possession of slaves; and when free labor rendered this species of "property" an unprofitable investment, but not till then, the slaves were sold "down South," and the pious Puritans of New York and Pennsylvania pocketed the money, comforting themselves all the while with the assurance that they were finally rid of this great iniquity—at a profit. When Great Britain determined to emancipate the slaves in her Colonial possessions, the vast sum of twenty millions sterling was cheerfully paid by the people of the mother country as the price of that liberation; and since then we have expended enormous sums of money in keeping up African and West Indian squadrons for the repression of the slave trade; and if the nation that has done and still continues to do, these praiseworthy actions, is not animated with "sentiments of the highest virtue," it is not easy to see how "the interests of commerce or ambition merely" can account for such services and sacrifices. While the people of Great Britain have been expending life and treasure in putting down the abominable traffic in human beings, the people of the United States were continually thwarting all our efforts in this direction, by allowing their flag to be prostituted to the vile purpose of sheltering well-known slavers laden with hundreds of unfortunate negroes. Slave ships were regularly fitted out in Northern ports under the very noses of the authorities; and although treaties were entered into between the Governments of Great Britain and America for the ostensible purpose of preventing the importation of slaves, yet, so far as the United States were concerned, these engagements were nothing more than waste paper.

The American nation boasts loudly of its love of freedom and independence; but the freedom which they cherish is confined to their own country; for, so far as we are aware, they have never spent a shilling for the freedom of any other nation or people on the face of the earth. While England was adding millions to her debt, raising enormous taxes, and sacrificing the lives of her veteran soldiers, in fighting the battles of half the nations of Europe, against the great military empires of France and Russia, the United States were absorbed in "ephemeral interests of commerce," leaving freedom in the Old World to fight or die, as fate or fortune might determine. Even in commercial legislation, the policy of the United States has been altogether selfish, when compared with the Free-trade and Reciprocity doctrines of Great Britain for many years past. We have admitted their great staple products—wheat and cotton—duty free, or at nominal rates, while they have imposed duties on our iron wares and cotton fabrics ranging from 15 to 50 per cent. ad valorem. We have also admitted their vessels to compete with our own in our valuable coasting and Colonial trade, while they shut their coasting trade against us, and refused even to allow British ships to trade between the ports on the Atlantic and the ports on the Pacific, although these places are thousands of miles apart. All these matters are notorious over the civilized world; and yet Mr. Seward has the assurance to ignore them altogether, and manner virtue for his country which is not the smallest possible title to claim or to receive. We might overlook the pragmatical assumption so much American "bunkum," if political capital were not intended to be manufactured from these "raw materials," to the disparagement of other nations, and more especially of Great Britain; but it does not require an elaborate study of history to prove that the policy of this country and the policy of the United States are founded on principles exactly the reverse of those which Mr. Seward is pleased to award them.

THE ENGLISH AND THE REBELS.

AN AMERICAN OPINION.

More expressions of Hatred.

The perfectibility of nations seems to be as much a dream as the perfectibility of man. Indeed, if there can be no such thing as a perfect man, a perfect nation must be out of the question. Still, among nations as among men, some are much more worthy of approbation and respect than others. We have always been accustomed to think and speak of the English as entitled to hold the first rank among nations in the scale of justice and humanity. As against the infidel fanatics and Jacobins of France of the era of 1793, as against imperial despotism and universal empire embodied in Napoleon I., we have been accustomed to regard England as the champion of the human race. So she was. Yet, with nations as with men, what inconsistencies, what falls from the heights of glory to the lowest abyss! England is a parallel to her own Bacon—

"The greatest, wisest, meanest of mankind!"

Our faith in English magnanimity was first shaken by her two Chinese wars. Does the whole history of mankind afford another instance of the utter selfishness of trade with foreign nations, which is the great god of British idolatory as the war undertaken in substance and result to force the consumption of English opium in China?—for such it was, in spite of all attempts to give a sort of gloss of justice to that infamous invasion, by a pretended demand for reparation for the destruction of English opium introduced into Canton against the laws of the Empire. Nor was the second Chinese war, in which that dear ally of the English, Napoleon III., took a part, but out of which we, even with such Presidents as Pierce and Buchanan, had the decency to keep, at all more justifiable. The English, not content with the advantages to trade conceded by the first treaty, determined to have more, and to give effect to that greedy determination, made a second war upon the flimsiest pretence. Supreme Providence may be at le, by its wonderful alchemy, to extract in this case, as in so many others, good out of evil; but of the moral character of these wars, and of the moral character of the nation that waged them, and not only waged them but justified them and gloried in them, what can be said?

The people of the United States, being cousin-germans of the English—flesh of their flesh, and blood of their blood—might have expected that however little scrupulous the English might have been in their treatment of the unfortunate Chinese, toward us—from policy at least, if from nothing else—they would have exhibited a semblance, if not of sympathy, at least of justice. Never were reasonable expectations more grievously disappointed. Except in the meanness of the Southern rebels, it would be difficult to find a parallel for the malice which the whole English nation—Government, newspapers, priests and people, a few individuals excepted — have exhibitied towards the American Union and its loyal citizens in the crisis of their greatest hour of trial and danger. The hatred of the English engrained into the hearts of the American people by the cruel ravages of the Revolutionary struggle, and the protracted series of insults and wrongs, including the kidnapping of ten thousand native American citizens, which culminated in the war of 1812—the hatred thus burnt into the hearts of the American people was deep. It has taken forty years to scab it over, and not only are the old wounds now re-opened, but new ones are being inflicted to which all the past is a nothing.

From the moment of the breaking out of the slave-holders' rebellion, the English nation—which, that is the ruling classes of it, is essentially aristocratic in all its ideas—sympathizes with the slave-holding traitors, hugged the idea that the Union was destroyed, and that a fatal blow had been struck at that growing and overshadowing democracy, which, from emancipating the black slaves of the American cotton-fields, might, by the moral suasion of its great example, proceed in due time to emancipate the white serfs of the English wheat-fields and the white slaves of the English cotton-factories. Here is the secret, and the whole secret, of that course and that position of the English press, the English Government, and the English public, which have taken us all so entirely by surprise. The rebels looking into their own hearts, judged more correctly of the English nation than we. That which we took for an atrocious libel, the prompting of an intoxicated imagination, has proved in this case the solemn truth. In one respect only were our slaveholding rebels mistaken. They counted correctly on the sympathies of the English. They judged rightly that cotton would respond to cotton, cotton lords to cotton-growing shareholders. But in counting on English aid, except in miserable attempts to run the blockade, and a newborn zeal for the rights of neutrals, of which England has been the determined enemy and opponent ever since the rule of the war of 1756, that is, for more than a century—except in this way, and by the moral aid and support which English sympathy gives, our rebels will look in vain for any overt acts of assistance. It is lack of courage, and not the lack of will, which has kept and will keep the English out of this fight. The loyal States are a thousand times stronger to-day than ever they were in the palmiest days of the past. Who, a year ago, would have believed it possible that the United States of America should have on foot at this moment an army of six hundred thousand men—the same sort of men, the same sort of officers, who made prisoners of Burgoyne and Cornwallis, who met the British at Chippewa and Bridgewater, and repulsed them at Plattsburg, and would do it again should occasion occur. In case of a war with the United States, it would take a much larger army than Britain can spare to defend her North American provinces, let alone the thought of invasion. Half at least of the Irish people are citizens of the United States,—fifty thousand of them and more are in arms at this moment. The old fire is smothered in Ireland, but it burns, and famine is key in blowing it into a blaze! Who can tell what might happen in Ireland? But the English might blockade our ports. What!—help to starve themselves, and to aggravate the stoppage of the cotton factories, by stopping the export of grain from the United States! A palpable step indeed! England needs cotton much, but just now she needs grain more. And what would become of that foreign trade, employed over every sea, for the sake of which England is ready every day to sell her soul, with our American mariners excluded from the peaceful commerce, and forced as it were to turn privateers? And might not that trusty ally, Napoleon III., so prompt to lend his aid and sympathy to the English in embroiling the Slidell and Mason affair — might not this trusty alley perhaps avail himself of so favorable a conjuncture to escape out of his own domestic troubles, growing out of a hostile church and a failing exchequer, by carrying out that favorite Napoleonic idea of a Gallic invasion of England? If, in this position of affairs, England would undertake to make war upon the United States, we might well presume that Bedlam had broke loose, and assumed the control of English affairs.—Cor. of the N. Y. Independent.

THE MUNICIPAL LOAN FUND TAX.

The Port Hope Guide in its last issue has an article on the Municipal Loan Fund question, in which it scouts the idea of a Municipality, even sunk as Port Hope is in hopeless bankruptcy, of its repudiating its debts as Hamilton and London have done, or that it should ask the country at large to pay its debt. Our contemporary has taken a correct idea of one feature of the case, and no honest man should advocate repudiation or evasion of any just debt. That Port Hope presents a hard case will be admitted, and although it has not addressed circulars to its bondholders apprising them of its inability to pay the interest, nor raised a noisy clamour of repudiation—which latter the Guide attributes to its press not being "demoralised"—not a bad puff—yet as actions speak louder than words, we cannot but conclude that Port Hope, in its failing to levy the 5 cents in the $, as directed by the Act of 1859—not '58 as the Guide has it — is an act of repudiation equally as much as if they had declared it. By the Act it is made a misdemeanour for a member of a Council neglecting to do anything to prevent the levying, collecting and paying the said tax. The clause reads:

Con. Stat. Cap. 83, Sec. 97.—"Every Treasurer, Collector, or other functionary, or any member of a Municipal Council, wilfully neglecting or refusing to perform, or concur in performing any official act requisite for the collection of the said rate, or misapplying, or being a party to the misapplication of any part of the proceeds thereof, shall be held guilty of misdemeanor, and such Treasurer, Collector, or other Municipal officer, member, or other functionary and his sureties shall, moreover, be personally liable for any sum, which by reason of such neglect, misconduct, refusal or misapplication, shall not be paid to the Receiver General at the time required by this Act, as for monies received by such member, Treasurer, Collector or other Municipal officer or functionary for the Crown."

With so plain an order of duty, and so serious a penalty for its neglect it is a matter of astonishment how twelve men could be found in Port Hope, or anywhere else, who would neglect, or refuse to comply with so imperative a duty as levying the rate. It is not for want of intelligence, or legal advice, but a seeming determination to pooh-hooh the law. Very possibly they calculated immunity from exaction of the rate, as they were represented by a steady supporter of a corrupt Government. They are now at least undeceived, and their triple woes culminate in one day.

No municipality must raise a less sum than the 5 cents on the amount for 1858. If the subsequent value of property should be less than in '58, a higher rate has to be levied. Now, when a Municipality sets a plain Act of Parliament at defiance, it follows either that other Municipalities may do the same, or that the law must be enforced. The latter course is being taken, and the law vindicated. Two years ago when the Municipal Loan Fund tax came up for discussion in our Council while striking our rate, a number of our Councillors were against levying it at all, urging as a reason that neither Port Hope nor Cobourg had done so, and pray why should we pay and they escape? they asked —very plausible reasoning indeed. So when the vote came it stood, if we mistake not, four for levying the five cents and eight against it. The yeas and nays were called for and recorded. On reviewing the law and the votes as recorded they at the next meeting of the Council voted unanimously to raise the money. It was done, and every cent of it has been paid to the Receiver General, and a happy thing it was for all parties that our city fathers adopted them their second thoughts. Our sister neighbor, if we are rightly informed, has 1859, 1860, and '61 rates to levy, assess and pay; and, as if to add to the burdens, the fall of the value of property will cause the rate for 1861 to be seven or eight cents in place of five, to realize the sum provided by the Act which is stated to be $6,124.

The people have been remiss, and the Government has been equally remiss in not enforcing payment ere now. It is as the Guide very justly intimates, an act of ruthless tyranny on the part of the Government to allow a town like Port Hope to incur a debt of a million of dollars, and it was a reckless act for the people to plunge themselves hopelessly into debt. There were two rival Municipalities striving to outvie one another by raising themselves—following with the Rail Road on either screw Rice Lake, and Port Hope with the Rail Road to Lindsay, which roads have indeed "benefitted other people more than those who are in debt for them." We feel the shoe pinching ourselves, and while we do not entertain any ill feeling towards our sister town, we are in some difficulty by our connection with its bankrupt Railway, from which, if we are not relieved, we may curse the day we ever formed that connection.

It has in its midst men who will do any thing the Law will allow them, to get money. We refer now to the unjust, the unheard of attempt to make innocent people pay their bad debts.

A number of persons about sixteen years ago agreed to assist in building a Rail Road from this to Port Hope, which was never done, and because they had the misfortune to put their names on paper, these unscrupulous corporants have sued them at a court of law to compel them to pay stock for a road never made. We shall have more to say on this subject anon. It is no uncommon thing when an individual "goes down" to drag many an innocent person with him, and so it is with Corporations, and we are now feeling the effects of a union with the reckless, unscrupulous, repudiating town of Port Hope. It is bad enough to have been inveigled into a bankrupt concern and sued for its debts, but it is worse to have it snap its fingers at us and tauntingly tell us to help ourselves. We have the satisfaction, however, of having done what we did in good faith, but if in our honest simplicity we have been duped we shall feel as honest men always do when conscious of having acted with honest intentions.

A "FERN" LEAF.

We clip the following from the Toronto Leader, and think our contemporary has expressed the views of the people of Canada—if not of the Government—of such a contemptible, ill-natured, misanthrophist as Fanny Fern. Surely the paper that would allow such really offensive sentiments towards a fellow-people to appear in it, deserves proscription. Its Proprietors should be held responsible for such a wanton insult, and they should be made to feel, here at all events, that Canadians have pluck enough to resent it, by treating the paper containing it, with the contempt it deserves:—

"We would not deem it necessary to notice the vaticinations of such a flippant writer as she who bears the name of "Fanny Fern" if her productions were not allowed a place in the columns of the New York Ledger, which is one of the most respectable American papers of its kind, and withal has a limited circulation in this Province. It is this fact alone which compels us to notice a paragraph in the last number of that journal from "Fanny Fern." She says: "If anybody on this or any other "continent, dislikes England more than I "now do, I would walk ten miles barefoot "to shake hands with him." Having thus "delivered herself she goes on to say: "If "he is anxious to know the degree of my "dislike, he will have to wait till I invent "a new dictionary, as all present words are "quite inadequate to the expression of my "disgust at the stupidity, arrogance, pharisaism, ignorance, treachery, cupidity and "deceit of universal John Bullism." This does not need comment; but further on she begs leave to express her sympathy with the Queen in her present sorrow; and why? "Because I think her a sensible "woman, for spanking the young princes, "like other folk's children, when their "British blood boils over." We doubt if anything in the shape of a man could be found in the whole United States to put his name to such a hard-hearted, brutal sentence as that last quoted. It is to be regretted that any woman would allow herself to be guilty of giving expression to such language towards a sister woman—and to the QUEEN of England, sunk as she is at the present time, in the profoundest sorrow at the loss of her beloved husband. "Fanny Fern" should hold down her head in shame, after such a performance; for the vulgarity of her writing is proverbial. The paper which could permit such language to disgrace its columns ought to be appreciated according to its merits, in the British Provinces."

THE LIBEL CASE.

BROWN vs. BEATTY.

Most of our readers know that a short time ago some very offensive correspondence passed between the Leader and the Globe. The proprietor of the latter, Mr. Brown, has entered an action against Mr. Beatty, of the Leader, for a supposed libel. The pleadings and arguments of the case were heard before Chief Justice Draper and Justices Richards and Haggarty, on Saturday last, in the Court of Common Pleas. The trial comes off at the next Assizes, and the case will excite a considerable interest.

In all justice we must say that whatever sins Mr. Brown may have to answer for, and they are not a few, the malicious and base insinuations thrown out by the Leader, which form the chief ground of the above action, he is not chargeable with the crime sought to be conveyed. Any man in Canada, after Mr. Brown's open, manly and full explanation, in his place in Parliament some years ago, of the malevolent charge of his leaving Edinburgh with the widow's money in his pocket, who like the Editor of the Leader, seeks to reiterate a charge so satisfactorily refuted, deserves proscription from civilized society, and such conduct the execration of every right minded man. A charge of swindling from the perpetrator of the York Roads swindle is very much like "Satan reproving sin."

AN ARMORY FOR PETERBORO.

At the Council meeting on Monday night his worship the Mayor stated that he desired to call the attention of the Council to the fact that by the Militia Act the Town of Peterboro was one of the places appointed to have an armory, and he considered that some steps should be taken in reference thereto. After some discussion his worship was requested to communicate with the Government on the subject,

We are glad to see this matter taken hold of. During the Trent difficulty excitement Col. Haultain, M.P.P., made the statement of a fact before unknown (or undiscovered) by many, that a large sum of money was appropriated by statute for an Armory in the Town, to be used "when necessity required it." Necessity now urgently requires it: our very large Volunteer force makes it necessary that some accommodation be provided them. The position of Peterboro is declared by good authority to be one of the best in Upper Canada as a military depot, and we have many inducements as a quarters for "regulars." We have plenty of everything for man and beast at cheap prices; we have many public grounds which could at small expense be converted into excellent parade parks; and we have a right good loyal population ready to welcome British arms amongst us. We hope that for once party and party differences will be forgotten in the desire to have what has long been apportioned us, and what the natural advantages of our position entitle us to.

BOARD OF SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

A meeting of the Board was held on Tuesday night and we understand that on the representation of one of its members, Mr. Hazlitt, the Board were brought to see that they had acted in an illegal manner in selecting Messrs. Brown and Stevenson to retire. Mr. Hazlitt pointed to the law which requires the Board to be properly constituted, which had not been done; that the duty of selecting two of the Common School Trustees to go out was the business of the members of that Board and not of the United Board. It was generally conceded that the view of the law taken by Mr. Hazlitt was the correct one, and if so all the meetings and proceedings since the election have been illegal. Rev. Mr. Burnham and Dr. Burnham took the opposite view, but the general feeling was that the Board had acted wrong. We understand that the Board of Common School Trustees will meet and select their men, when they will be prepared to meet with the joint Board, and proceed legally to business.

We have been informed that two additional members for the Grammar School were appointed at the late sitting of the County Council, thus giving eight Grammar against six Common School Trustees. It is a fact however that the numbers will in future stand as here given, and it strikes us as something wrong if a preponderance is given against those who necessarily represent the rate-payers. The Grammar School Board may be selected outside of the town, and it is neither fair nor just that the parties paying the money should be placed in a position which may jeopardise their interests. If it be according to law that in a Union Board six members are to represent one branch let the other be reduced to a similar number. "Fair play is a jewel."

☞ We are requested to state that the collection in the First Presbyterian Church, on Monday, the 3rd, was not made because of absolute need, on the part of the family, but to help to pay the expenses attendant on the accident to the girl. We happily make the correction.

☞ As will be seen by advertisement, Mr. Stenson has opened a Registry Office for Servants, in his store. Such an office is needed, and master (or mistress) and servant will find it a good way to secure help on the one hand, and employment on the other. We commend Mr. Stenson to the public as a reliable Agent.

TEMPERANCE MEETING.

We are happy to say that a public Temparance Meeting, by the Peterborough Temperance Reformation Society, has been arranged for Wednesday evening next.—We were in hopes that the Rev. Dr. Shortt or Rev. Dr. Ormiston would be present, but circumstances have precluded the probability of either coming. It may be as well, however, for the first meeting to be held in the way it is now intended to be. The intention is to more firmly establish the Society, and place it in a position of usefulness. This, perhaps, may be better accomplished by a meeting of those who are acquainted. Revs. Messrs. Roger, Carrol, Cameron, Colwell and others, will probably address the meeting.

☞ We would repeat the announcement that the ANNUAL ANNIVERSARY SERVICES of the First Presbyterian Church will take place on the 16th and 17th insts. On Sabbath, Rev. Mr. McLaren, of Belleville, one of the most talented ministers of the Canada Presbyterian Church, will preach, morning and evening.

On Monday evening following the Annual Soiree will be held. No one who was present at the Soiree last year will have forgotten the very pleasant time enjoyed by all. The ladies of the congregation are sparing no pains, and no ladies know better how to manage a Soiree on a large scale than they do.

BIBLE CHRISTIAN SOIREE.

A public Tea Meeting will be held (D.V.) in the Bible Christian Church, Peterboro', on Thursday evening, February 20th, to commence at half-past six o'clock. Tickets 25 cents each, to be obtained at the door. Proceeds to be applied to and the Trustees of the Church in making necessary repairs and improvements. Interest will be added to the occasion by a variety of suitable addresses from the resident ministers and others.

BAPTIST S. S. ANNIVERSARY.

Our friends of the Baptist Church of this Town held their Sabbath School Anniversary on Thursday evening last, in their Chapel. The occasion was an interesting one; there was a good and respectable attendance. After all had partaken of the bountiful supplies of the good things, provided by the ladies of the congregation, the meeting was called to order by moving Wm Hall, Esq., to the chair, Then after some preliminary exercises the audience was addressed by Revs. Messrs Rice, of Fenelon, Alexander, of Brantford, Lloyd, of Whitby, and Colwell, Roger, and Carrol, of this town. There was excellent speaking; the speeches were of a telling character and most appropriate to the occasion. The Chair, under the leadership of Mr. Jas. Miller, contributed not a little to interest and enliven the congregation. The meeting altogether was a pleasant, profitable and successful one. On Friday evening Rev. Mr. Alexander preached in the same place, and at the close of his sermon two candidates were baptised. On Sabbath morning he preached a very interesting and appropriate sermon to the young, who listened throughout with marked attention. In the evening, when the Chapel was crowded to excess, he preached with great effect to a most attentive audience. We doubt not that happy results will follow these meetings. X.

OUR SEWING MACHINE FACTORIES.

(From the Hamilton Advertiser.)

Among the Sewing Machine Factories in this country, Wanzer & Co.'s is certainly at the head, and is now a fixed fact among our manufacturing establishments; and it is with pleasure we state that they are now doing a most successful business. Their Machinery, which is of the best description used, is now in the most perfect running order. They turn out about 150 Machines per week, and employ a large number of hands in the Factory, besides their Agents, who do a thriving business in the different sections of the Province. They have at present over 100 Machines running in the city of Hamilton, by private families, to the entire satisfaction of the purchasers, which is one of the very strongest recommendations, and a reference to the numerous testimonials on our third page fully demonstrates.

Messrs Wanzer & Co. have established in Hamilton, the most complete Sewing Machine Factory outside the large American establishments. Their Machines are fully equal to the best American make, while their prices are much lower than inferior Machines can be procured from the States. In view of these facts we think every Canadian who requires a Sewing Machine should patronize Messrs Wanzer & Co., as they are thereby advancing the prosperity of the country, by encouraging the promoters of home manufactures.

This establishment manufactures the celebrated Singer, and Wheeler and Wilson Machines. The latter is the best family Machine patented; while the former is unrivalled for executing all kinds of work from the most delicate fabric to the thickest shoe leather. Purchasers of Machines made by Messrs Wanzer & Co., have also this advantage over others, they not only get them warranted, and kept in order for one year; but in case of accident, they can get a Machine repaired, or any bolt or screw replaced in a few hours, on application to the Establishment; as every piece is made to a gauge, and consequently the parts of one Machine may be transposed for those of another, of the same size. Either Machine is simple; not easily put out of order when in proper hands, and in point of effectiveness and finish they stand without a rival.

The Sewing Machine is now fast becoming a household necessity, and when its merits become more familiar to our lady friends, and more thoroughly known throughout the country, almost every family in the land will have one. What the improvements in Mechanical and Agricultural implements and machinery have done for the "lords of creation," the Sewing Machine has, in a measure, done for the ladies. We have all heard of the hardness of the poor sewing girl's lot; and who among our readers has not read Hood's celebrated song of the shirt, with "Stitch! Stitch! Stitch!

Through poverty, hunger and dirt,
Sewing at once with a double thread,
A shroud as well as a shirt."

We do not say that the advent of the Sewing Machine will dispel all these evils; but we think its general introduction will have the effect of greatly lessening them. It is on this account, as well as the opening of a new branch of manufactures in our city, that Messrs Wanzer & Co. deserve our support; while their liberality to Ministers of the Gospel and poor widows in their parishes, should entitle them to the encouragement of the benevolent and philanthropic.

The following certificate we append with pleasure, from a gentleman well-known in this community, as giving a correct description of the working of the Machine.

Hamilton, 21st Sept., 1861.

Messrs. Wanzer & Co.;

Gentlemen,—After having used Wheeler & Wilson's Sewing Machine, manufactured by you, in Hamilton, in my family for some months, I can safely and with truth recommend them to any party requiring such, for efficiency, ease, and rapidity in performing any ordinary work required, and I would further state, that they are a most valuable acquisition to any family valuing health, economy and comfort, and that I would not be without it for twice its present value. I am convinced if the ladies understood its capabilities to seam, hem, cord, bind and gather, they would have the "Dear little Love of a thing," their liege lords' opposition to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Yours truly,
WM. H. MILLS.

We would caution our friends and the public against purchasing American Machines, which are got up for the Canadian market with a very handsome exterior and finish, the general workmanship of which is of an inferior quality; and parties after using them for a time find the Custom-house and other expenses of sending them to the States to be repaired is nearly as much in the end, as would go far towards purchasing a good Machine of home manufacture.

With respect to the working of the Wheeler & Wilson and Singer Machines, we cannot do better than insert an extract from Mrs. Stephens, the able editress of the New Monthly.

"One feels as if performing some beautiful magic, while sitting so quietly before that dainty machine, with the pedals just touched into motion by the feet, as our old-fashioned flax wheels were set in motion—and the pretty array of spools, and silver wheels, and sharp needles, performing their regular music under your fingers. Then the swiftness of it—all the satisfaction and glory of having all your sewing done up in a few hours—of seeing your pretty rosewood case shut up, covered with bijouterie, and turned into the most charming piece of ornamental furniture—all this is making play of work, and making usefulness an elegant accomplishment. Our machines will make three dresses—no matter how heavy or fine, in far less time than the dressmaker requires to fit one. It will hem handkerchiefs, do all sorts of fancy stitching, and rival the daintiest work of the whitest fingers with magical neatness. It only requires a little care, a drop of olive oil now and then touched to the delicate mechanism, and you have the motive power of fifty seamstresses doing ornamental duty in your parlor while out of active use—eating nothing, asking nothing, and never singing the mournful "Song of the shirt."

Jas. Stevenson, George Street, is Agent for Peterboro'.

Communications.

To the Editor of the Examiner,

DEAR SIR,—What I meant by my last letter was that I thought the Statement of the Board of Trustees published by you not satisfactory to the Rate-payers of this Town. If the accounts are published at all they should be in detail; the names of persons receiving salary and the amount should be given. The Miscellaneous and the Incidentals may comprise any thing.—Will the Treasurer please to give us the desired information?

Yours, &c.,
A RATE-PAYER.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

MR. EDITOR,—Will you permit me through the medium of your valuable paper to make a suggestion to our Volunteer Companies as to the expediency of appointing a Committee to ascertain from the Government whether they intend to build an armory in the Town of Peterboro, and to impress upon the Government the necessity for such a building. Also, to petition the County Council for a site on the Court House Square, or for a grant of money to purchase a site in some convenient place, which, with the amount granted by Government namely, $3,000, would build a commodious armory and drill room, and thereby save a vast amount of expense to the Volunteers in the way of rents, &c. As the whole country is to receive benefit from the Volunteer system it is only just that the country should share a little of the expense, as the Volunteers have to devote a great part of their time to drill, &c., for which they receive nothing more than those who do not devote one cent's worth of time to the defence of their country. I would propose that each Volunteer Company appoint two delegates to meet at such time and place as may be afterwards agreed upon.

I remain, Mr. Editor,
A VOLUNTEER.

Smith, 8th Feb., 1862.

For the Examiner.

A REJOINDER.

MR. EDITOR:—In the Examiner of the 6th instant, I see a reply by E. to a communication I lately sent you, concerning his interpretation of Romans xiii. 1, &c. I have read his letter carefully; still, notwithstanding, I am yet sceptical as to the soundness of his views as therein exhibited. I believe that the Apostle (and the same remark applies to the quotations from the Bible, given by E. in vindication of his position), enjoins subjection to civil rulers generally, in so far as their commands are in conformity with the Divine law, and the institute of ends of civil magistracy, (which I consider an ordinance of God), but no farther, Mr Editor.

"God has 'ordained' civil government, as Christ has ordained the ministry of reconciliation, not by willing its existence merely, but by prescribing its duties, its functions, its ends, and its limitations." —WILSON.

Many persons as well as E. seem to labor under the impression that Paul's phrase "for conscience sake" may be understood somehow of conscience towards man.—This I consider a mistake; conscience can only be properly exercised towards God, according to the section in the Westminster Confession of Faith, "God alone is Lord of the conscience," &c.—chap. xx, s. ii. A ruler, who is regarded as not on the whole acting up to the ends of the institution of civil rule, may nevertheless be obeyed, when commanding what is right (otherwise, Mr. Editor, he is not to be obeyed), and that for conscience sake—conscience in the case having respect only to the authority of God. But while the Apostle did not raise the question as to whether any particular Government answered the ends of the institution; and while, for obvious reasons, it was not to be expected he should do so, he was guided by inspiration to make use of an exortation most wisely and comprehensively adapted for the instruction of more than one class of mankind. He virtually instructs rulers how they should act, and to the people the character of the men they should choose to office, besides instructing them in the duty of obedience.—He manifestly describes not what Rulers actually are but what they should be.—rulers such as the ends of the institution require. It is not my purpose, Mr. Editor, to go into details here. If you or any of your readers desire to pursue this subject further, I would commend to them the writings of Hoadly, and also of Scott, Sargent, McMillan, and Balfour, of a former age, as well as that of the Symingtons of Scotland (the first of Scottish theologians), and Wilson, McCree, and Armstrong, of the present. Thorburn's Cornucopia is a master-piece of reasoning, in exposition of all the passages of Scripture bearing on this subject, as well as E.'s queries on existing governments and the Millennium.

E.'s interpretation of Romans xiii, 1, &c., confounds the distinction between the providential will of God, and His preceptive. By ignoring this distinction the holders of Negro slaves seek to justify their conduct, quoting Noah's curse upon Canaan. The crowning iniquity of mankind, was, doubtless, the crucifixion of the Son of God. Yet if we ignore this distinction, both Jews and Gentiles must be held perfectly guiltless in the matter, for they only did what "God's hand and counsel determined before to be done."—Acts iii. 28.

In short, Mr. Editor, to deny this distinction as E. does is to abolish all moral distinctions, all difference between right and wrong as effectually as even Pantheism itself could do. To deny this distinction contradicts other scriptures: "They have set up Kings, but not by me; they have made Princes, and I knew it not."—Hos. viii. 4.

I should like to hear how E. would expound this, in consistency with his exposition of Romans xiii. When David was anointed King, Saul was still in existence and possession. Absalom had possession for a time, with the consent of a majority, yet who can doubt that David was all the while rightful King? Adonizah was king de facto, Solomon de jure. So of Athaliah and Joash. Elijah refused to acknowledge Jehoram.—2nd Kings iii., 13, 14; compare ch. viii, 32. Let me now come to the New Testament. "Go ye and tell that Fox," saith the Savior himself of Herod.—Luke xiii., 32. "Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the Saints."—1st Corinthians vi. 1.

Nero, or the Roman power, seems to be indicated by "the lion" in 2nd Timothy iv., 17. Every reader of the Apocalypse is familiar with the wild beast, having 7 heads and 10 horns, to which the dragon, (i. e. the devil, see chap. xii. 9), gave his power, and his seat, and great authority. Rev. xiii. 1, 2; compare Daniel vii. 7.

An ordinance of God, forsooth, Mr. Editor, yet owing power, possession, and authority, to Satan!

Again, E's interpretation contradicts notorious facts. Nero was Emperor of Rome at the time the Apostle wrote; Christians were everywhere persecuted by Jews and Gentiles. To be accused of Christianity was almost certain death in some horrible form. How Christians must have stared had they been told that Nero was God's ordinance, and the minister of God to them for good, in any sense different from that in which a plague is. But to tell them that Nero was not a terror to good works but to the evil, must have led them to question the sanity of the man who could utter such a thing. The same might be said in regard to many of the subordinate actual rulers of the period. Pliny's letter to Trajan at a subsequent period calls Nero "the common enemy, and the fury of mankind." Tacitus said of Nero and some of his predecessors, that "virtue brought men who lived under them to certain destruction. E. claims obedience to every government on the ground of existence, expressly refusing to admit the element of character at all. The Apostle expressly founds the claim on character, as a glance at the passage will show. It is thus, E. versus Paul. According to E.'s interpretation there can be no such thing as a lawful Revolution. No Revolution can be effected without setting aside existing powers; this cannot be done without resisting them. But all such resistance, if E.'s interpretation be correct, is damnable. The Revolution of 1688, from which Britain derives so many advantages, necessarily comes under this category if his interpretation be accepted. This interpretation, by another way of viewing it, leads us in Hades. Apply the Apostle's description literally to every actual possessor of power, and it is impossible to avoid the inference, that the distinction of right and wrong depends wholly on the will of the civil magistrate.

Finally, and to cap the climax, the devil exists, and is in actual possession of power in the providence of God. He is, therefore, God's ordinance, and a minister of God for good to Christians, to whom they must need be subject for conscience sake, and whom to resist is "damnation." E. may say that Paul's language is to be limited to human rulers. I am willing to admit this limitation and more than this. But if it be insisted that we are to take the words as they stand without any rational qualification, then I must insist that the Apostle does not expressly restrict what he says to human powers, and if it be extended to all actual possessors of power, without respect to character, there is no reason in the world why satan should be made an exception. The Apostle's words, on E.'s theory, do not necessarily exclude him. If the door be not wide open and a welcome given to the servant, why should it after that be slammed too only when we hear the sound of the master's feet behind him. I know nothing in point of absurdity to compare with E.'s theory, except Transubstantiation.

I now finish this letter, Mr. Editor, and with it this controversy; it is one your readers generally are not interested in, and to prolong which I have neither time nor inclination.

E. may consider my views erroneous.—Well, let him do so; I cannot help it. They were instilled into me by a Christian parent, and have had for their advocates and apologists men in Britain and Ireland conspicuous for their erudition and piety, having few equals and no superiors.

DREADFUL COLLIERY ACCIDENT.

TWO HUNDRED MEN AND BOYS BURI

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE "NOVA-SCOTIAN."

Portland, Feb. 8.

The Nova Scotian arrived at 4 o'clock a. m., with Liverpool news. The Etna arrived at Liverpool on the forenoon of the 23rd. The Norwegian arrived at Londonderry on the morning of the 23rd.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post says it is not true, as some French journals represent, that the French Government has taken any steps to bring about a reconciliation between the North and South.

A speech was delivered by Mr Massey, member of Parliament before his constituents at Salford, in which he advocated that the European Powers should interfere to close the struggle by recognising the Confederates, and breaking the blockade, attracted some attention.

The Times, in an editorial ar icle on it, says, let France interfere if she likes, England's true policy is to suffer a little longer, and let the great work itself out, it will not be long. It may indeed be doubtful whether our interference would not rather retard than hasten the desired event of opened ports and a large supply of cotton. Let us then pursue our honest policy of standing quite aloof.

The Manchester Guardian argues in a somewhat similar strain, and as regards the Cotton supply, says it is a question how far in that district prevailing distress is due to the civil war, and whether it is not as much attributable to previous over-production as to the more dearth of cotton.

The factory statistics of Manchester show that the shortening of an hour's labour in the factories is gradually extending, and in the course of a week or two the movement was expected to become much more general and extensive.

The Times pub ishes a letter from a correspondent, calli g attention to the fact that the Tuscarora has infringed and continues to infringe the rules of neutrality, at Southampton, and calls on the Government to no longer tolerate such flagrant disregard to neutral rights.

The brig West Indian, Captain Foote, from Charleston on the 24th December, with a cargo of spirits of turpentine, had arrived at Liverpool. Her captain represents the blockade of Charles on as anything but effectual, and says that the ston blockade, so far from stopping the entrance to the port, will eventually deepen shallow channels, and the citizens of Charleston have little uneasiness on the subject.

It is represented that Charleston was well defended, and that between there and Savannah General Lee had about 40,000 troops under his command;

The French steam de-patch boat Forfait at Cherbourg, had received orders to be ready to sail for North America on a special mission.

A London letter in the Patrie asserts that the English Government will protest against the measure for declaring the Southern ports closed against foreign commerce.

After g'reuous exertions, access had been gained to part of Hartley coal mine, and about 100 of the 215 buried miners had been discovered dead. It was feared that the remainder of the miners would be found dead in another portion of the mine.

The Paris Monitenr of the 22nd publishes M. Fould's budget in the shape of an address to the Emperor, for the sake of economy in figures ap roximate the francs into pounds sterling. M. Fould's estimates for 1863 exceed those of 1862 by £2,800,000. But the increase is only apparent as there will not be the extraordinary and supplementary credits, which amounted to over £6,000,000 last year. The Military and Naval estimates show an apparent increase of £260,000 over 1862; but in fact the army will be reduced by next January to its total establishment of 400,000 men and 86,700 horses, while in 1861 its average strength was 467,000, and is still 446,000.

The naval estimates amount to £6,720,000, and as they will cover ordinary and extraordinary services, that will show an important diminution to cover the increased expenditure.

M. Fould proposes additional taxes on horses and carriages kept for pleasure, and increased duties on registration of deeds, and an augmentation in stamp duties. From these sources he expects £2,000,000, although workmen are to be exempt from the tax on personal property; and by the close of the year he expects a surplus of £800,000.

The total accumulated deficits at the end of 1863 is stated at £40,320,000, but M. Fould declares it will not be necessary to resort to loan. He proposes the conversion of 4½ per cent stock to 3 per cent., but if holders decline the terms, the State shall subsequently redeem the stock. The extraordinary budget of 1863 is to be made the subject of a special law to provide for constructing railways and public roads. M. Fould recommends the temporary establishment of additional duties on salt and sugar, which he expects will produce £2,500,000. With the help of all these ways and means, the ordinary and extraordinary expenditure of 1863 will be fully defrayed, and although the accumulated deficit still remains, it will not only cease to increase, but will soon diminish.

M. Fould's report caused great excitement on the Bourse, and funds declined considerably; at the close, however, there was some recovery, and rentes were quoted at 69 85, a decline of about ½ per cent.

The Times' correspondent in Europe that the military forces of France has no desire to disturb the tranquility and industry of Central Europe, and it will shoot up and flourish with vigour not to be surpassed in the New World.

Princess Clothilde is reported as enciente.

ITALY.

Turin papers publish a de-patch from Rome, asserting that the Austrian government was about to address the genial Powers, desiring the State of the Pontificate as constituting a perpetual menace, and pointing out the necessity she should be removed to disarm.

A marriage is talked of between Prince Oscar of Sweden and the second daughter of the King of Italy.

Mgnr. Corsi, agent of Antonelli, had been arrested at Leghorn.

The Italian Chamber of Deputies, after a stormy discussion, voted a duty of 60 per cent on railway passenger receipts.

SPAIN.

The official Gazette formally announces the Queen's accouche.

PRUSSIA.

In the Chamber of Deputies the Ministers of Finance, amid shouts of members, laid on the table of the House a Bill relative to the privileges of the Board of Control, and stated that the Bill should be considered as taken that Government has the assumption of the constitutional political affairs peaceably to view.

RUSSIA.

An imperial ukase has published stating that the Polish peasants will be made to pay the full duty on salt, and the export duties on grain.

which in the case of the latter will be five per cent. on articles entering Russia by European and Asiatic frontiers. A tax is also levied on registered letters.

BRAZIL.

Additional details by the French mail report that General Flores had taken possession of Santa Fe. Rosas, the late Governor, and Gen. Lopez had fled to the desert. Troops were sent in pursuit.

There were heavy arrivals of sugar at Pernambuco and a large stock on hand, but prices were unaltered.

The question of European intervention in America is much more freely canvassed, the proceedings at Charleston harbour and the alleged general inefficiency of the blockade being the excuse put forth.

Earl Russell, in a letter to the Liverpool ship-owners, says the British Government notified Lord Lyons when the measure was preparing, that such a cruel plan would seem to imply despair of the restoration of the Union the professed object of the war, for it never could be the wish of the United States Government to destroy cities from which their own country was to derive a portion of its riches. Such a plan could only be adopted as a measure of revenge and irredeemable injury against an enemy. Lord Lyons was further told that even in a scheme of embittered and sanguinary war, such measures could not be justifiable. It would be a plot against free inter-ourse with the Southern States and with the civilized world. Lord Lyons was desired to speak in this sense to Secretary Seward, who, it was hoped, would disavow the illegal project. Now, however, that project seems to have been carried into effect at Charleston. Lord Lyons will be instructed to make further representations to Secretary Seward with a view to prevent similar acts of destruction of other ports. It was stated by the French Minister at Washington, that he was furnished with a formal de-approbation of the French Government at the conduct of the American Government in choking up Charleston, and would join Lord Lyons in protesting against such an act.—The Times continues its denunciations and asserts that the project against Bologne in 1804, was by far a different thing, having been destined to shut in a hostile fleet.

The Morning Post says that matters are evidently approaching a situation in which the de facto Government of the South may claim a consideration in Europe.

Some journals say that if in spite of the remonstrances other ports are served like Charleston, England and France will have nothing left but to interfere.

The Liverpool Post emphatically declares civil war must be stopped by mediation if possible—by force, if absolutely necessary.

The Daily News continues boldly to denounce the idea of recognising the South, and says it is time the country should utter its voice against it in an unmistakeable tone. It is reported that the representative in protesting the blockade inefficient will be taken by France. The French Government journals continue to comment on the Charleston blockade.

The privateer Sumpter having been ordered from Cadiz, reached Gibraltar on the 19th, and, during the passage, burned the American bark Neapolitan, from Messrs for Boston, with flour; she also captured the brig Investigator, of Seaport, for New-port, with ore, but all owed her to proceed. Six of the Sumpter's crew deserted at Cadiz, and made submission to the American consul. The Captain of the Sumpter claimed them as deserters, but the Spanish officials declined to give them up.

The Tuscarora and Nashville are in statu quo at Southampton.

France sends large additional forces to Mexico, and will take the lead in operations there.

Lord Elgin was about to leave for India. He promised a deputation on the cotton question to do his best to encourage the growth.

The Bank of France reduced the rate of discount from 5 to 4½.

The Bourse was buoyant at 70 to 80.

The other continental news was unimportant.

LATEST.

LONDONDERRY, 24th.—The Times city article says that an uneasy feeling prevails that the avoidance of a complicatory connection with American affairs cannot be permanently anticipated, and the feeling will probably increase until the meeting of the French Chambers on Monday, at which some indication of the policy to be adopted by France, England, and Europe generally seems looked for.

The belief gains ground that the French Government considers that the proofs of the fictitious character of the blockade have long been too complete and numerous to render possible their being passed over, without danger to those public and national rights, the quiet maintenance of which depends on a firm regard for precedents.

The city article of the Herald says the accounts from America are of the most despondingchar acter, the commercial situation of New York being unparalleled.

HORRIBLE DEATH.

A Mrs. Griggs, formerly of Hungerford, came to her death at Taunton on Friday 24th ult., in the following manner:—She was standing with her back to the fireplace, when her clothing caught fire, and not until a considerable portion of her dress was in flames, did she discover her terrible position. She immediately rushed out of the house and called herself in the room, but before the flames were extinguished her clothes were completely burned off her person.—Medical assistance was immediately called, but it was of no avail; she lingered in the greatest agony until the following morning, when death put an end to her sufferings. She leaves a family of five small children dependent upon the charity of the community.—Cobourg Sentinel.

THE BRITISH N. A. PROVINCES,

We have now reliable returns of the personal Census of the British North American Provinces. The result is as follows:

Canada,	2,506,255.
New Brunswick, (over),	250,000.
Nova Scotia,	303,000.
Prince Edward's Island,	80,000.
Newfoundland,	123,628.
Total,	3,262,883.

The population of the United States when they became a nation was nearly as great as this. In 1800 it had not reached 5,000,000.

—The Hastings Chronicle gives a report of the judgment of the Court, depriving Mr. Benjamin of his seat in the Township Council of Hungerford. A new election for the Ward he represented will consequently, of ouce, take place. A Reeve for Hungerford, and a Warden for the County will therefore have to be re-elected both of these offices becoming vacant by Mr. Benjamin's losing his seat in the Township Council.

—The passpors of Paris are greatly increased in numbers. There were 70,000 in 1859, 91,000 in 1860, and 106,000 in 1861.

THE WONDERS OF THE MICROSCOPE. —We understand it is through the agency of this marvel viewing instrument that Dr. Ayer has at length succeeded in finding the Pallodal Miasm and determined its character. Of its effects we in this section have abundant evidence in the Fever and Ague which it alone produces when absorbed through the lungs into the blood. It has long been held to be a vapor or something in the vapor of water from decayed and decaying vegetation. Under a great magnifying power, the Doctor has found this vapor to contain distinct organsmy or living bodies, corresponding precisely with those found in the blood of Ague subjects. They are 13,000 times less than visible to the naked eye, but have distinct character and form. He thinks they are reproductive in decaying matter or in the blood, and hence their long continued life or the remote effects of them in the system. He maintains that they resemble in character the other fermentative poisons, or such as the virus of rabies or of a dead body, &c., all of which are known to reproduce themselves with great rapidity like yeast in moistened flour, so that the slightest quantity impregnates the whole mass. Yeast, through a powerful magnifier is seen to be a forest of vegetation which grows blossoms, and goes to seed in a short time. Miasm is not so distinctly vegetable, but has more the appearance of animal life, although its motions cannot be perfectly distinguished. What the Doctor claims to have settled is that it is an organic substance and he has further found and embodied in his "Ague Cure," what will destroy it.—Leader, St. Louis, Mo

A FIRST CLASS FAMILY NEWSPAPER DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF SCOTCHMEN IN AMERICA, AND TO THE DISSEMINATION OF SCOTTISH LITERATURE AND NEWS.

FIFTH YEAR.

ON January 2nd, 1862, was commenced a new volume (V.) of the Scottish American Journal; and in future the number issued twice in the first and last days of each year will constitute a complete volume, of convenient size for binding; and each number will contain a most entertaining and instructive repertory of reading matter, calculated to interest all readers of British origin. The Scottish American Journal, though decidedly international in its constant efforts to promote peace and prosperity between the people of Great Brit in and America, is yet emphatically Scottish in its copious records of all events occurring in Scotland that can be regarded of the least interest to natives of that country residing in America; and to this "news from home" is added, weekly a summary of general intelligence from England, Ireland, and other parts of the world.

A distinguishing feature of a Scottish American Journal is its regular re-publication—scientias et literatim—of the "leading articles" of the prominent British newspapers and other periodicals upon the most important topics of the day. This feature is a unique one, and has been found very acceptable to the people of British North America, as it supplies a long needed desideratum in the Provinces. In reference to the "editorials" of the Scottish American Journal, it is a significant fact that the British press frequently acknowledges their intrinsic truth and force by copiously extracting from our columns and declaring that the Scottish American Journal is the most able and interesting paper published in America. A concise weekly summary is also given of the principal items of American news, and a similar narrative of events transpiring in the various British Provinces, the latter feature supplying a deficiency which was felt in several of the Provinces of late Agence as to what was transpiring in other parts of the British possessions.

In the forthcoming volume of the Scottish American Journal increased space will be devoted to the literary department in the publication of serial tales and sketches, vividly illustrating the customs, habits, sentiments and general characteristics of the people of Scotland each tale emanating from the pen of an author of celebrity. As heretofore, particular care will be exercised in the choice of original poetry, composed by writers of acknowledged genius and purity of thought, resident here or abroad. The first number of the new volume contained the commencement of a deeply interesting tale, entitled

THE LIEUTENANT & HIS SON.

This tale will prove to be one of the most interesting ever published, and will be appreciated by all classes of readers.

INTO

FEBRUARY.

Where now the vital energy that moved,
While summer was, the pure and subtle lymph,
Through the imperceptible meandering veins
Of leaf and flower? It sleeps; and the key touch
Of unpitying Winter has impressed
A cold stagnation on the intestine tide.
But let the months go round, a few short months,
And it shall be restored. These naked shoots
Barren as lances, among which the wind
Makes wintry music, sighing as it goes,
Shall put its grateful foliage on again,
And more sparkling, and with ample spread,
Shall wear new charms, and more than they have lost.

The 'cold stagnation' of which Cowper thus speaks, is every where manifest. All the plants are taking their winter sleep from the tallest tree in the forest to the humblest mosses and lichens that flourish in their shade. For nearly half a year they are torpid as if they were dead. If there is any movement of the vital force within, it is carefully concealed. The leaves have fallen from the larger trees and shrubs, forming a warm covering for the delicate plants that flourish only in the protection of the forest. Then the snow falls and makes it still farther protection, so that the ground in the far north is frozen no more than in our own latitude; if the snow comes early it may not be frozen at all in the deep woods even in the coldest seasons. If we should move the snow we would find the winter green and prince's pine, the adder's tongue with its purple blue, and its kindred plant the creeping gool-yearn, with its white veined and netted leaves and twinberry with its bright scrled hues, and a great variety of other humble plants as fresh and summer. Most men are strangers to the world of beauty that lives and has its being under the forest leaves, or but just above them. It is one of the advantages of the passion for Wardian cases, which has recently come over our cities and villages that it is bringing to light these lowly dwellings of the retired woods, and secluded swamps. A man may live a life time in the country, and be familiar with the woods without suspecting that there is more than one kind of moss, or of ferns, or of lichens. The mosses have a certain family kindness, but a very slight examination shows a great variety among them, as among oaks. On almost any dozen acres of our moist woodland, especially if they are threaded by small rocky streams you may find at least a dozen varieties of mosses and as many lichens, with several kinds of forms. All but the ferns are quite accessable in every mild spell when the snow and ice melt. Nothing can exceed the delicacy and beauty of some of these mosses. Some are soft and fine as velvet, others of feathery shape, and others still, resemblies chased silver. Sometimes the lichens and moss are intermingled in the same mass, the lichens sprouting out of a velvet sod like stag horns. The ferns are only to be found by the fall n leaves and stalks of the last seasons' growth. Nothing can be more charming for the winter parlor than one of these Wardian cases tastefully arranged. Hyacinthes and crocuses flourish under the glass, but are not essential to its beauty. Almost all plants like those we have mentioned, which grew in the shade, will do well in the Wardian case.

While the plants are taking their winter rest we may stop to discuss the bearing of labor upon our prosperity. Adam Smith has well said, 'Labor was the first price, the original purchase money, that was paid for all things. It was not by gold, or by silver, but by labor that all the wealth of the world was purchased.' The land now divided into farms and owned in fee simple was almost worthless to the aboriginies, who drew from it a scanty, precarious subsistance, by a very rude husbandry. They laid up few stores of grain, and were always in peril of starvation. It took thousands of acres to support a single individual. This land has become valuable by the labor that has been bestowed upon it. Our government assumes that his lands are without value, and it surveys them, and gives a title deed with a guarantee of protection for one dollar and a quarter an acre, assuming that will be the cost of its survey and protection. The land grows valuable to us, just as we bestow skill and labor upon it, up to a certain limit.

The wild land is made valuable to the purchaser when he puts a fence around it. He may then turn in his cattle and exclude those of his neighbor. If he fells the forest, that labor increases the value of the land by enabling it to yield more grass and hay.—He can keep more stock and make more butter and cheese for market. If he plow, after the forest stumps are rooted away, he adds another value to the land by making it yield the roots and the grain. He can keep still more stock and get a still larger income from his land. If he lay out more labor and plow an inch or two deeper, he gets still larger crops and puts a higher value upon the land. We get a very fair crop in some parts of the country if the seed is only dropped and covered upon the plowed land. It is improved by once cultivating and hoeing. But some find that a crop of corn pays abundantly for four times cultivating. Not a weed is left to draw upon the strength of the soil, or to scatter its seed and make work for another season.—The more stirring of the soil, they say, the more corn. The more labor the more profit.

Then again, if we add to the plowing and tillage the labor of making and applying manure to the land it is found to pay better still. Just how much we may profitably spend in this way no skillful farmer would find it easy to say; it is much beyond anything now done. Some acres produce 20 bushels of corn, others 80. The principle difference is in the labor and manure which is only labor in another form. The leaves of twenty cows for a year occupy but small space and will be mainly wasted without care. With labor enough they will make 200 cords of manure. Apply 50 cords of manure to an acre and it will yield astonishing crops, so all the measures and scales are suspected of lying by farmers of the old school, who are afraid of hiring too much labor. The garden has more labor and manure than the field, and so produces vastly more per acre.

It would not do to lay it down as a maxim without qualification, "the more labor the more profit," there must be a limit; but it is far beyond our present practice. It is found to be far more profitable to raise eighty bushels of corn to an acre than forty, or any less number, in the sea-board States where corn is high. One man works two hundred acres with a single hired man and boy, and just gets a living. Another, with no more capital, works the same sized farm with eight men, the year round, with teams to match, and gets rich. He pays the men from the products of their own labor, and saves a profit to himself. His practice furnishes the needed hints as to the direction in which labor should be employed. In our arrangements for the coming season, we need a more generous faith in the capacities of the soil to reward labor.

TRY THE FOUND WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING.

A perfect Antidote, Specific and Cure for

RHEUMATISM & NEURALGIA

has long been needed. After earnest and patient research, this has been triumphantly discovered. It is called

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING!

Watson's Neuralgia King reaches the source of the trouble, and punishes the disease from the system. Unlike the untold number of Liniments and Embrocations which merely stimulates the surface, are but temporary in their effects, and are, at best, of doubtful virtue, it STRIKES AT THE SEAT OF the ailment, ARRESTS IT, KILLS IT, ERADICATES IT, and leaves no trace behind.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

also cures GOUT AND DYSPEPSIA, in all their forms. It is now giving relief to thousands who have been suffering from these diseases, and who have tried all other remedies in vain.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

has received the highest testimonials from the highest sources in regard to its wonderful efficacy. It operates with equal success in mild and chronic cases, never failing to work out a speedy and permanent cure.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

costs but one dollar a bottle, and less than a bottle often effects the end desired.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

is the only Specific and cure for Rheumatism and Neuralgia that has ever been discovered.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYANS'

PULMONIC WAFERS.

THE most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for the relief of all diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat, &c.

These Wafers give the most instantaneous and perfect relief, and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health, who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organs is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO VOCALISTS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, in all cases, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

OF the NEW PATENT ENGLISH ELECTRO-GALVANIZED, ANNEALED AND CARBONIZED

LIGHTNING RODS

JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH

STRATTS' RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!

AND ENLARGED

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers: is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod. Professor Croft has a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Stratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, the rods drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, causing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fall in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the City Hall Tower, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Common Iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

Orders sent to our address from the principal cities of C. W., will be attended to by C. H. Kendall in person, without extra charge. We submit two of our numerous references.

PIPER & KENDALL,

TORONTO, Sept. 15, 1860.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPERintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rod, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

PETERBORO', July 20th, 1861.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods so highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The improved Attachments and Insulators, with Stratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

J. BROWNE, M. D.

I entirely concur in Dr. Browne's observations,—Also have bought two of the same Rods for my two cottages on Brock Street.

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE, we present you with a perfect likeness of Tequa, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the agents for these Pills.

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in travelling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was thus that the "Mountain Herb Pills" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it it is conveyed thereby to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food properly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain head of the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a long rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave disease behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life soon dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body, they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES.

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. This Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and sweet, clearing and renovating the vital organs.

Pleasant indeed, is it to us, that we are able to place within your reach a medicine like the "Mountain Herb Pills," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to beguiles with the fluids of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

☞ The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Tezcuens, a tribe of Indians in Mexico. Get the Almanac of our Agents, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "GREAT MEDICINE" of the Aztecs.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four Pills every night: eat plenty of solid; avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially the power of cleaning the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so sadden us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken

MARS versus MONCK.

Suggested by two recent appointments to the Militia Department.

AIR,—"The Cork Leg."

What's this you have been doing, Monck?
The people all are in a funk
At such an insult to their spunk,
As making a mere political skunk,
Who long lay in our do-little trunk,
An Militia Minister, heighoe!

John A. that Minister—my stars!
What will all genuine sons of Mars
Think of a man whose only scars
Are those obtained in Venus wars,
And chiefly made on whiskey jars,
As Militia Minister, heighoe!

No won der that our yeomen stout,
The wisdom of the choice shall doubt,
A Randolph, even to the snout,
Is scarce the man to tempt them out,—
With all the humbug he can spout,
They're too familiar, heighoe!

Fords strutting now with sword and sash,
Ye gods! see John's lieutenant, Nash,
A creature who, if crime wars crash,
Would faint to see a gun but flash,
It e'er the Yankees we would thrash,
'Tis not with such men, heigho!

How long Canadians, will ye
Submit to such toomfoolery?
How long will this sa ne John Mc?
Unwhipt of justice go, while we Do nothing but sing heighe?

Why I left the Volunteers.

"Then I'll resign," said I.

"Very well," said he, "you can do as you please."

And now having repeated two sentences which had been running in my mind ever since they were uttered, I will try to tell how it was I came to make so decided a remark. It is unfashing, the soothing effect which repeating a grievance has on the sufferer, and this must be my excuse for inflicting my woes on an unoffending reader.

First then, to introduce myself. My name is Codlings; I am short, stout, and middle aged, and I am, or rather (alas!) was a captain in the Targetshire, or Death to the Invader Volunteers. And I may add, that no one could have been a more thorough volunteer than I was. I was proud of the uniform and I liked the exercise.

The 18th of June had long been fixed as the day on which a grand review of the corps was to take place.

As M. P. for the county was to be present, and a bugle was to be presented by the M. P.'s daughter, and altogether we felt that the eyes of Europe would be upon us, and we felt equal to the occasion.

As the day approached, our drills were multiplied to such an extent that most of us feared our uniform would hardly last so as to be fit to be seen at the review, so great was the strain upon it.

However, practice makes perfect, and after our last drill on the evening of the 17th we, one and all, considered that we were so near to perfection that our talents would be altogether thrown away upon an ordinary field day, and that nothing short of a grand sham fight, on the exact model of a real one, would at all do us justice.

It was in vain for our adjutant—a half-pay officer of the army, who is dreadfully jealous of our progress, I am sure—to object, battle we were determined upon.

The only difficulty was to decide which battle of modern times should be honored by our notice. Alma, Inkermann, Solferino, were all discussed; but each presented some objection, and we were nearly giving up the idea and the adjutant becoming triumphant, when Waterloo was proposed, as being appropriate to the day; and moreover, it was added that there was a small clump of trees on the parade ground, with a cow shed in it, which would do admirably for Hugomont and its adjacent wood.

The next question was to find a leader for the forces to be driven back; so one was desirous of appearing in the light of a beaten general on their first field, till at last I, Codlings, was selected to enact the part of the great Napoleon.

The somewhat secondary part of Blucher was to be taken by our senior first lieutenant, Crabtrees by name.

Crabtrees had been originally in the hussars, but having been rather too fond of chicken hazard, had sold out, and retired to his ancestral acres. He was for some time my front rank man, and although, generally speaking, most expert at the Manual, he invariably ordered his rifle on my toes, apologised, smiled at my agonized contortions, and repeated the performance five minutes afterwards.

He it was too, who with malice aforethought abstracted the detonating composition from my percussion caps on the eve of a field day, thereby covering me with confusion; and added insult to injury by exposing the trick he played me at the very moment I was expatiating on the utter uselessness of the government rifle to select a circle of friends and startling my belief that it was impossible to make most of them go off.

Again, on the occasion of my being off my reserved by accident, Crabtrees was the man who discovered its absence, in spite of my trying to look innocent and unconscious, and presented it to me amidst the jeers of my comrades. Altogether, Crabtrees was a nuisance, and I hated him cordially.

Our Colonel was to command the supposed British army, assisted by the Adjutant, while I was allowed, as is not off to be latter functionary, the drill sergeant of our corps.

The night of the 17th of June was a restless one for me; the thoughts of to-morrow's battle pictured with me, and prevented my sleeping; and when I had counted myself at last into a doze, I awoke with a start, five minutes afterwards, with the fear overwhelming that I had been omitted to be called, and that the review and all were over. [illegible] I was in the midst of the [illegible] Colonel [illegible] in my grasp, and the whole household rushing to my room to ascertain the cause of the sudden outbreak.

At last, after having looked at my watch a hundred times, I found it was six o'clock and I got up, rushed to the window, and fates be praised, it was a lovely morning.

How I got dressed that day, I know not; for in the excitement of the moment, the buttons flew off at my touch, like needles to a magnet. At last, my toilet was completed; but with my feelings, breakfast was not to be thought of; anything beyond a cup of tea would have choked me outright.

Our rendezvous was to be the railway station, where we were to receive our M. P., who was to arrive by the ten o'clock train, and from thence we were to march to our various positions.

Crabtrees was to remain at the White Hart as the town until sent for, and was then to come up with his detachments to conduct the pursuit.

The ten o'clock train arrived, and with it the M. P., who shook hands with all the officers, and complimented individually every non-commissioned officer and private on his soldier-like appearance.

The M. P.'s daughter, who was to present the bugle, was lovely, and I burned to distinguish myself, and obtain, perhaps, an approving smile, or even a crown of laurels, which she might—who knows?—have secreted in her pocket. Toe laurels, not the smiles, I mean.

We marched off, our band playing one of our favorite airs. I regret not being able to state which it was; but unfortunately, the first cornet, who always played the melody, was ill with the toothache, and was unable to attend parade, so we were obliged to march with accompaniments only, but the big drum did its duty nobly, and we did not miss the first cornet so much after all.

At length we reached the parade ground. I stole a glance at the M. P.'s fair daughter as I marched my men off to take up the position of the attacking the French army, and my heart throbbed audibly through my uniform.

When we arrived imagine my chagrin at being told by our drill sergeant, who appeared quite to ignore me, that my position was to be a stationary one, and that in imitation of Napoleon and his look-out tower, I must climb a tree and from thence watch the proceedings. I was never good at climbing, but with a little assistance, and—I am sorry to say, for the credit of our discipline—an occasional reminder from some of my men's bayonets, I reached the second bough.

Our fellows behaved splendidly. Hugomont, or the cow shed, was taken and retaken, and at length the time arrived for the last grand charge. Human nature could stand it no longer. I had been doing patience on a monument for two hours, and was thoroughly sick of it, so I determined to depart from history and my tree, and lead the charge myself.

I had some difficulty in getting down, and when I had succeeded my men were already charging, and just as I was running after them at my best pace who should I see coming up between us but that confounded Crabtrees and his supposed Prussians!

They had evidently lunched at the White Hart, and appeared to have taken more drink than was good for them. However that might be, they no sooner caught sight of me than they raised a shout of—

"There's Bonaparte himself! Let's take him prisoner!"

I turned and fled.

It was in vain. My figure was not calculated for running, and they gained upon me at every step, but I still held on—I scrambled over hedges and through ditches, but still felt they could catch me at any moment. I unclasped my sword-belt, in hopes that that trophy would be sufficient for them. But no; one picked it up, and the others still pursued; they evidently looked upon me as the representative of invasion, and were determined on revenge.

I ran until I could run no longer, and then sank exhausted. They seized me, and in spite of all my protestations and struggles, and explanations that I was only Codlings, and not Bonaparte, they dragged me to a duck-pond. I heard a "one, two, three, and away!" and the next moment I was floundering in four feet of black mud.

I struggled out as best I might. The first man I saw was Crabtrees, who apologised for the behavior of his men, with a smile on his countenance, for which I could have slain him then and there.

When I recovered myself a little, I crawled rather than walked up the parade ground, and arrived just as the bugle had been presented.

My appearance was the signal for a general shout of laughter. Even the M. P.'s pretty daughter—whose semi-official position should have kept her quiet—laughed. The more I stormed and swore, the more they all laughed; and well they might, for I presented the spectacle of a dripping nigger.

The next morning I went to the Colonel, and lodged my complaint against Crabtrees; but it was of no use, he only laughed at me, and I then expressed myself in the words with which I began my sad tale.

I have, since writing the above, just seen the Gazette, in which I perceive the following:

TARGETSHIRE VOLUNTEERS.—F. Crabtrees, Esq., to be captain; vice Codlings, resigned.

Imagine my disgust.

A PRACTICAL JOKE.

The only thing of the kind in which Mr. Barham was personally engaged, was when a boy at Canterbury, when, with a schoolfellow, now a gallant major, "famed for deeds of arms," he entered a Quakers' meeting-house; looked around at the grave assembly and said, "Whoever speaks first shall have this gun." Only they never entered a word [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] the CANADA BEGINNING TO BE KNOWN IN THE OLD COUNTRY.

It is gratifying to know that Canada is beginning to be understood in the Old Country. Some years ago this country was as profound a mystery to the masses of Great Britain as the fabulous regions beyond the Moon. And the world grew older an indistinct notion possessed the European mind that Canada was a land of eternal snow and frost—fit only for bears and wolves. In the process of time actual observation convinced several that our winter was not so severe or so long as it was represented to be—that it was a very jolly time of the year, and that our summer and autumn were delightful seasons.

Within the last few years only our true position was faintly understood. The visit of the Prince of Wales has done much to dispel the cloud of ignorance that intervened between us and the land we sprung from.—The visit of the British troops this year cannot but benefit us in a still greater degree.

It will be seen by our English, Irish and Scotch visitors that Canada is to be envied among the civilised nations of the world—that our constitution has all the excellence, and, if we may say so, none of the defects of the constitution of England—That our institutions are preeminently calculated to make a people free, happy and great—that our natural resources are wonderful, our fisheries inexhaustible, our mines unbounded, our forests magnificent and extensive, and the fertility of our soil remarkable.

The many public works that we possess are a source of pride to us, and will be a theme of wonder to our visitors. Our railroads are the longest in the world, our canals very good, and our bridges, especially the Victoria and Suspension Bridges, wonders of the world. We have not time to speak of our lakes and rivers, with their banks studded with towns and cities, alive with the hum of commerce, and increasing every day in size, population and importance. The population of Canada is increasing at the rate of fifteen or twenty thousand a year from emigration alone, and every able-bodied emigrant landed on our shores is worth to the country $500 a year.

We have been induced to make these remarks by reading the following extract from the London Daily Telegraph. The press of Great Britain, we rejoice to chronicle it, are beginning to understand Canada. We trust our cotemporaries will increase in knowledge and circulation daily:—

"It is remarkable that the Canadian press troubled itself throughout very little about the law of the case. It seems to have satisfied public opinion north of the St. Lawrence to know that Mr. Seward maintained something against which England protested.—The name of the foreign minister is, rightly or not, a standing threat to all that Canada values; and it was enough to seem to identify a view with his to condemn it. She went therefore to work at once, with the heartiest good-will, to provide for the policy she expected. We were fortunately able to assist her beyond her expectations, for the courageous colony was prepared to bear the brunt of war alone till spring. She must have suffered, of course, in the first weeks of hostilities, and she knew it. When her frontier line was settled, military contingencies seem to have been the last thing thought of; and it consequently runs along a country difficult to keep strategetically. On the lakes, where the contest must have depended upon superiority in ships, Canada could not hope at first to rival the Yankee flotillas. There are, it is true, ship-builders in Kingston, at the mouth of Ontario, and at Collingwood, on Lake Huron, who could have turned out vessels; Port Stanley also, on Lake Erie, might have been a navy port but there were no guns there; while the Yankees, on the other hand, had flourishing ports and dockyards, and a real maritime station at Sackett's Harbor. That Canada was willing to incur this unequal rivalry is full of honor for her and of security for us. The winter is indeed wonderfully mild and open, and if need had arisen, we might have sent gunboats and shipwrights perhaps, very early, by the Rideau and Welland canals, and set a fleet afloat upon the great freshwater seas which would have secured Upper Canada. But if war had broken out and the weather sharpened, it must have been a near thing to save the Western, London, and Niagara districts from a raid; though the population is thoroughly anti-Yankee, and British enough in its elements to take a reverse or two with composure. Lower down, Canada was quite as much exposed to a coup de main. The Lake Champlain line would have led a New York force straight on from Albany to Montreal—some 200 miles—and if the Island City could have been seized, Quebec was cut off from the Western Provinces. Nor is that all which Canada had to foresee, and it bravely refused to fear. Both banks of the St. Lawrence are British until Cornwal', on the Canadian shore, is reached, and then the rapids commence. To avoid these, eight canals have been dug, which the Northerners could have utterly destroyed. The only other water communication between the lakes and the Gulf is the Rideau Canal, with Kingston at its western and Montreal at its eastern extremity. Thus Montreal is the very key of the inland waters, and of those districts which would have been the seat of war; but this capital was not so strong as Canada could have wished to see it; and a Yankee force holding that city would have shut up the Ottawa, and thereby the Rideau Canal, quite long enough to punish Canada severely. In the face of these obvious dangers, her gallant bearing and dauntless tone are as much a gratification to us as they were, and will be a warning and discouragement to the manifestly destined."

THE COLLIERY CALAMITY.

Additional particulars of the terrible calamity at Hartley colliery, by which so many lives were lost, are deferred until to-morrow. When the sad result was known, Her Majesty sent a letter to the proprietor of the mines, as follows:—

"OSBORNE, Jan. 23.

"Sir,—The Queen, in the midst of her own overwhelming grief, has taken the deepest interest in the dreadful accident at Hartley, and as to the last had hoped that at least a considerable number of the poor people might have been recovered alive. The appalling news since received has affected the Queen very much.

"Her Majesty commands me to say that her tenderest sympathy is with the poor widows and mothers, and that her own misery only makes her feel the more for them.

"Her Majesty hopes that everything will be done as far as possible to alleviate their distress, and Her Majesty will feel a real satisfaction in assisting in such measures.

"Pray let me know what is doing.

"I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedient, humble servant,

"C. B. PHIPPS.

"Charles Cary, Esq., Hartley Colliery."

This very affectionate letter had been printed, and a copy distributed to each of the bereaved families. It is authoritatively stated that a subscription had been opened by Her Majesty—she having given £200—and the Prince of Wales £100, His Royal Highness accompanying his subscription with a kind letter. £6,000 had been raised. £1,000 was raised on 'Change in Liverpool in two days.

THE WINDHAM LUNACY COMMISSION.

The last act of this protracted drama was played out at the Session house, Westminster, before Mr. Samuel Warren, Q. C., Master in Lunacy, and the special jury.

At eleven o'clock the Master came into court, from which the general public had been rigorously excluded. He said, in a pathetic strain, that he was very unwell, owing to his great exertions in the case, and his speech of three hours yesterday.

Sir Hugh Cairns again protested against the examination of Mr. Windham taking place in private.

The Master said he adhered to his determination. He informed the learned counsel that he had quoted the judgment of Lord Campbell in the Armstrong case in support of the decision to which he had come.

Sir Hugh Cairns observed that the Armstrong case was essentially different, and he was not about to discuss it; but of course he (the learned judge) was bound to defer to the opinion of the Master. He hoped that all the questions that were to be put would be through the Master, as had been previously arranged.

The Master said that he was not disposed to agree to that now. The interview with Mr. Windham would be of a strictly friendly character.

Sir Hugh Cairns again protested against the examination taking place in private.

The Court was then cleared of strangers.

EXAMINATION OF MR. WINDHAM.

Mr. Windham took his seat on the bench by the right hand side of the Master, who shook hands with him. He appeared quite self-possessed, and replied to the questions put by the Master without any apparent difficulty. Mr. Windham gave an account of his first acquaintance with his wife, and replied promptly to the Master in reply to his questions about the French language.—The journey to Scotland, the visit to Paris and the other incidents of Mr. Windham's career were fully inquired into. Among other questions, Mr. Windham was asked "What is your definition of a perfect lady?"

He maintained a calm and sensible demeanour.

THE VERDICT.

At a quarter to four o'clock the jury returned a verdict into court, and Master Warren, addressing the foreman, said—Sir George Armytage, are there twelve of your body agreed upon a verdict?

Sir G. Armytage,—There are. We find Mr William Frederick Windham to be of sound mind, and capable of managing himself and his affairs.

There was immense excitement in the court and outside when the result was made known.

A DENTIST RUNS AWAY WITH A FARMER'S DAUGHTER.

From the London Prototype.

A somewhat singular case of abduction was brought before his worship yesterday for investigation. The charge was preferred by Mr. Thomas McCarthy of Port Stanley, against W. P. Whipple, a dentist, of St. Thomas, and Joseph Whitechurch, of the same place—the former the principal, and the latter as accomplice in the abduction of his daughter, the facts of which we proceed to give to our readers. The evidence of the prosecutor (the father of the girl) went to show that on Monday afternoon he learnt from his daughter Ellen that her sister Agnes, who for some time past had been living with Whipple, at St. Thomas, learning the dress-making, was hurriedly and mysteriously sent off to London, in a cutter. Fearing that all was not right, the father and daughter at once made arrangements to follow the girl, and started off without delay, reaching this city late this evening. Upon their arrival, information of the circumstance was given to the police, who, with their usual promptitude, soon obtained a clue to the missing one.—After making a thorough search of the city, constable Mawhinney visited the hotel of Mr. Howard, and there found Agnes, Whipple and Whitehurch, all of whom had put up there for the night, the two former intending to take the cars next morning for Detroit, with the intention, it is said, of being united in the bonds of holy wedlock. The father was made acquainted with the stopping-place of the party, and at once hastened to see his daughter, and prevail upon her to accompany him homeward. Failing to do this, the matter was brought before His Worship as stated. The evidence of the father showed that Whipple had a wife and child in St. Thomas, with whom he then resided, and which, if true, made the case doubly worse than it would have otherwise been. Whipple, however, denied that the woman in question was his wife, although he had lived with her as such for a number of years; but having now got tired of her, from her bad treatment of him, he had resolved to leave her, but with her consent. He repudiated the charge that he had in any way induced the daughter of Mr. McCarthy to leave her parents, but laid the blame on the girl of the whole transaction. Agnes freely acknowledged that she was solely in fault, but urged that she had such an undying love for the dentist, that she was never happy but when in his company, and that no power could separate them. Her father and sister, both in court, pressed her affectionately to go home again, promising that all her past acts should be forgiven and never again referred to, but all to no purpose, with tears in her eyes she declared she was ashamed to return after what had happened. His Worship informed her there was only one other alternative; either to go back with her parent or be confined in jail. Here the poor girl again burst into tears, said she would prefer jail to return, and wished to remain in London. Finally, at the urgent solicitations of her friends, we understand, she consented to return home. It appears that a correspondence had been carried on between Whipple and Agnes for some time past, and the discovery of one of the letters from the latter to the former, in the carpet-bag of Whipples, by his wife, led to the separation. Scandalous, and brought about the circumstance of Whipple having left St. Thomas so hastily. From what we can learn further arrangements were made with Whitechurch by Whipple to convey Miss McCarthy to London by a private conveyance, while, to disarm all suspicion against Whipple, he took passage by the Port Stanley Railway, the three having met together upon their arrival in this city. Mr. McCarthy is a well-to-do farmer, and is highly respected in the neighborhood in which he resides. The poor man felt greatly grieved by the course pursued by his daughter, and acted like a child while prevailing upon the poor girl to accompany him home. The daughter is twenty years of age, while the dentist appears to be 30 years of age.—The father intelligenced the matter to his own kith and kin yesterday, to prevent additional calumny and injury to the unfortunate Whipple was remanded to jail, and Whitechurch bound over to appear at that time.

THURSDAY, FEBY. 20TH, 1862.

PARLIAMENTARY CORRESPONDENCE.

We are happy to be able to state that an occasional, or, as we hope, weekly correspondence, to our columns will be contributed from Quebec, by a most reliable writer, during the coming session of Parliament. The advantage of having the opinions of a writer present in Quebec on the matters coming before the House will be great, and cannot fail to be of interest.

From our Reform friends we would ask their exertions in our behalf in inducing persons who are not already, to become subscribers. See that every family in your neighborhood is supplied with a copy. We remind our friends of our standing Club terms:—

Clubs of 10.....$10 00
Clubs of 5..... 6 25

and would add, as an extra inducement, that to every person who will send us the names of three new subscribers, with the money for one year's subscription, the Examiner will be sent one year free.

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT.

An extra Gazette contains the notice that Parliament is to meet on the 20th of March. If England and the United States consider it wise to meet early in the winter why pray do our Canada Ministers put off their meeting till Spring? And what adds to the annoyance of this off putting is there has been no excuse offered for the delay.

It is too bad to be treated as we are by our government, and we do hope that the present parliament will pass an act for the Legislature to meet not later than say the first Wednesday of February—the earlier the better.

THE WAR NEWS.

We give considerable space to the accounts of the recent engagements between the Federal and Confederate armies. The capture of Roanoke Island, the destruction of Elizabeth City, and the taking of Fort Donelson, although at tremendous sacrifices of life, are great victories for the North. It remains to be seen whether these will be followed up by other successes; if not, their only effect will be to prolong hostilities. We recommend every reader to peruse the reports.

ANOTHER CHAPTER OF RAILROAD HISTORY.

£100,000 STOCK.

FIRST ACT.

Some time ago when giving a narration of certain matters connected with Railroads in this region, we were led to notice the sad consequences, in a moral point of view, connected with their introduction in a locality, consisting in a wholesale system of jobbery and corruption, being employed to further the designs of unscrupulous men, always found in connection with Railways. Every species of intrigue and falsehood are resorted to, every inducement and reward held out to persons whose influence is considered useful, and nothing seems too costly to sacrifice if municipalities can be persuaded to give their assistance to build the proposed Railroad.

We know a considerable—we published a good share of what we knew of the history of our Millbrook branch—but there is many a dark tale that will never see light. If what we know and relate of Railroads is so demoralising to the community, how much worse would their subroons history add to the dark picture. Sad and black as the former delinquencies of our Railway history appeared they sink into insignificance when viewed in relation to what has transpired since our former review. Our object this week is to give a history from the commencement of our railroad experience, so as to show up the wickedness of bad and unscrupulous designing men, and the hardship endured by their confiding and helpless dupes. We start begin in order, waiving an allusion to the famous loop line.

In 1845 the subject of a Railroad to Port Hope was agitated by the people of Port Hope and Peterborough, and it was proposed that we should join Port Hope in taking stock for the purpose of building said Road. It was pointed out what advantages such a connection with Lake Ontario would be to Peterborough and the surrounding country; how the facilities thereby enjoyed would further the commercial interests, both by imports and exports. It was so successfully represented that a large portion of the business men in Peterborough, and a goodly number of farmers in the neighborhood, subscribed for stock. In the same year an Act was passed incorporating the Peterboro and Port Hope Railway. The Act provided that proceedings were to be commenced within four years from the passing of the Act.

The survey was made, and one dollar per share was called and collected to pay the expense. Nothing more was done, however, until 1852. In that year the town of Cobourg succeeded in getting a Charter to build a road to Peterborough across Rice Lake, independent of Peterboro' entirely. This bold stroke of a rival Town threw the Port Hopers on their beam-ends, but recovering themselves they flew round and got the Councils of Port Hope, and Townships of Hope, Cavan, and South Monaghan to agree to take stock in the Peterborough and Port Hope Railway, and also to petition the Legislature to extend the Railroad clauses consolidation act to the said Company. Accordingly an act was passed in 1852 authorising the Municipalities to subscribe for shares in the company—also removing doubts as to the commencement of the work, existing under the former Act—and extending the time of commencement to four years longer. All these proceedings, be it remembered, were undertaken without the assistance of the Town of Peterboro', and with but a few of its inhabitants.

In the following year the Port Hope tinkers, stunned by the activity and pluck of the Cobourgers—who like men when they got a Charter went to work to build their Railroad—and getting alarmed that Peterborough would be reached by their neighbours ere they begun, concluded that they must do something, so they form the brilliant idea of running branches from some point of the main line—not yet began—to any where and every where, and to effect this the old act must be repaired, or unpaired. So down they come to the Legislature and beg to have the Act amended. First, by extending its capital to a million of dollars!! Second, by having power to construct a Branch Railway from some point on the main line through Cavan, Emily, Manvers, Ops and Mariposa, or any of them, to the western limit of Mariposa, and from there to the next Railroad they should strike—no wonder they wanted a million of dollars for such utopian schemes. In the third place they got the 18th clause of the old Act repealed, and got a number of clauses of the general Railway Act to apply to the Peterborough and Port Hope act. But the crowning part of their mending operations is that of the next clause, wherein it is made lawful for the Directors to call upon the shareholders for the amount of their stock by giving thirty days' notice, and in instalments of not more than ten per cent, "Provided always that no subscriber to the Stock Book, under the original Act incorporating the said Company shall be held to be a stockholder, or be responsible as such under the Act passed during the present session amending the same, if such original subscriber shall within one month from the passing of this Act signify in writing to the President of the Company his intention of withdrawing therefrom." How many of the Shareholders beside the head tinkers in Port Hope would hear or know of such a clause till they saw it in the statutes when published? The framers of this clause were farseeing, and they evinced skill sufficient to entitle them to be called "skilled workmen," "learned artificers."

They then make provision for joining any Railway Company they may happen to come across in their main line or branch this side of the Pacific Ocean.

We have now examined "two splices of the main brace" as they say aboard ship, and yet there is no more made to build a Railroad to Peterborough or anywhere else by those tinkers in Port Hope.

Peterborough lies with arms akimbo as there is a road coming out to her as fast as it can be made. The spirited people of Cobourg come out and say to us, "we merely want you to allow us to build a road to your Town, we ask for nothing but permission to come into the Town." What a pity such doers had not been in Port Hope when the road was started. How different would it have been for us and them. But we must now examine the next move of the guild at Port Hope. Finding it is not in the power of the wisest of men, even if so inclined, to build railroads to the moon, or in fact to the planets, and stung and chagrined that Peterborough was lost to them, and had refused to assist them, they define their position, determine to build a Railway on terra firma to some given point, and define the places where they are to go through and to, as follows:—Millbrook, Onemee and Lindsay. But, in order to go to work it is necessary to splice the main brace again, and so in 1854 they apply for another Act. As they do not intend to touch Peterborough they want the name changed, so they now come out as the "Port Hope Lindsay & Bearerton Railway Co." They desire no connection whatever with a town like Peterboro', who will allow Cobourg to come into their Town with a Railway, so they keep ten or twelve miles away from her. They have repealed what of the former act suited them, but no mention was made of relieving the original Stockholders in and around Peterborough. It was always imagined that as no road was built between Peterborough and Port Hope such persons were free from any obligation under the original compact. But it is here we find the cunning of the tinkers. In every mend they take care to keep hold of the Stock takers. They keep the original act as a basis, and patch and solder at it till little if any of the original remains besides holding the original stockholders.

The Road to Lindsay is built and the Company is bankrupt. Many persons have claims against it, obtain judgments, and now it is discovered that the original Stockholders are not relieved from paying their stock by the different acts. So two of the head tinkers, John S. Smith and William Fraser, being judgment creditors of a rotten Railway company—made so by their handiwork in conjunction with the fraternity, and making this a lucrative discovery — commence actions against all the parties who subscribed for stock in the Peterborough and Port Hope Railway Company. The rapacity and unscrupulousness of these turnverants appear in the course they are pursuing, in seeking to compel innocent parties to pay their sad debts.

The terms of the original agreement were never carried out, and the promises to pay were only to conditions framed and understood that these were false. With a full conviction a note for his friend he induced the fatherhood that he, poor him—of to pay the note of his friend fails to do so. But by this time the township for Smith to a Railroad which never will be built. And yet these bankrupt tinkers, who deserve a share of blame for the bankrupt condition of their Railway and Town, seek to compel these persons to pay the amount they subscribed for another Road to satisfy their claims, and so far have they pushed their sordid purposes that the poor widows and representatives of dead men are alike filled with the wealthy. These men may obtain judgments and collect the money but the curses of their victims and the execration of all right thinking men will follow them.

The whole history of the Railway enterprise, and the rascally and unscrupulous conduct of many of its chief manipulators, especially of this last cool blooded, infamous act of these villainous men, may well make us blush for the morality of a country we profess to be proud to belong to.

Our history of the Millbrook branch and the attempts of an equally unjust nature in connection therewith, must form the material for another chapter.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Monday, 17th Jan., 1862.

The Council met,—His Worship, the Mayor, presiding.

Applications from John A. Hartley for the office of Collector, and from J. E. Baker for Market Clerk or Assistant Constable, were referred to the Committee on appointments to office.

A petition from John English and 41 others, asking the Council to re-appoint the night-watch was read. After some discussion, it was moved by Mr. Chamberlen, seconded by Mr. Toole, —That the Constables, as prayed for by the petition now before the Council, be appointed, and that a local tax be assessed upon the property in the locality in which the services of the Constables are required.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Hughes, seconded by Mr. Maloney,—That the Constables be appointed as night-watch, and that they be paid out of the general funds of the Town.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Bradfield, seconded by Mr. R. Stevenson,—That the petition of the rate-payers asking for the night-watch, be referred to the Committee on appointments to office.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Reid, and seconded by Mr. Chamberlen,—That the consideration of the appointment of a night-watch be deferred until the appointment of the Chief Constable.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Chamberlen, seconded by Mr. Lawson,—That the Mayor be authorised to give an order on the Treasurer for the sum of $10, for the use of the Brass Band of this Town, for their valuable services.—Carried.

A report from the Committee on appointments to office was handed in. After some discussion, and by consent of the Council, the Chairman obtained leave to withdraw it again.

The Mayor stated that in conformity to the resolution passed last meeting, the Clerk had prepared a return of the fines and fees paid and owing to the Police Court for the past year, which he would lay on the table.

A By-law to amend By-laws Nos. 81 and 133 was read a first time.

A By-law to amend By-laws Nos. 128 and 132 was also read a first time.

The Council then adjourned.

SEWING MACHINES.

The Sewing Machines of Wanzer & Co's manufacture, is the order of the day. When we witness the perfect manner in which they do their work, it is only astonishing to us that every family in the country has not one. Every machine is warranted, and kept in order, free of charge. We are credibly informed that they have a large factory in Hamilton, where all corresponding parts of their machines are made perfect and alike, and where any part of a machine may be had repaired or made new altogether. It must be a great interest to R. M. Wanzer & Co., to have every machine they sell run well and satisfactorily to the purchaser, which can readily be believed, when we take into consideration the large capital they have invested, so no one need be afraid of getting a useless article of their manufacture. They have now between one and two thousand running in this Province, and are turning out about 50 a week. These manufacturers should be encouraged. We learn that Wanzer & Co. have received some very flattering orders from England and France, and the prospect is that they will establish an extensive trade at home. J. Stevenson, Peterboro', is their general agent.

☞ We have received a communication from "J. J." which we decline to publish for several reasons, which we deem unnecessary to give. We may be wrong in our impression, but we look upon it as a sort of burlesque; if it is not then we advise the writer to write less and read more. If, however, "J. J." is anxious to appear in print and will allow his name and residence to be given we may, when space permits, give his letter an insertion, otherwise it is inadmissable.

☞ The Editor of the Independent in an article on the Foreign Press says:—"There is little doubt that much of the hostility both of the English and French press has been procured by sheer bribery with money furnished by our rebels, either out of their own pockets or out of the proceeds of their robberies from our Government." "Hostile to us are the English Government, the English press, and many of the English people." Rather naughty things for a Clergyman to charge upon a nation without better proof than he has advanced. He displays ignorance of human nature if he supposes the English could be friendly to a power whose press has been for months pouring vituperations, malicious insinuations and threats towards an unoffending power, that it required the aid of bribery to repay its neighbor with its own coin.

☞ Mr Joseph B. Walton, the Agent, has handed us the Annual Report of the Canada West Farmers' Mutual and Stock Insurance Company. As most of our readers are aware this Company confines its business exclusively to isolated buildings, and to these, no doubt on good terms, the Farmers' Company.

By the report we observe that the total expenses to 1861 amounted to only $9211 46c., including salaries! The number of losses to the Company during the year was 37, of which 6 were in this County,—3 in Cumberland 1 in Monaghan. The total number of risks taken during the year was 4,993, of which 1,187 were produced through the Inspector, Mr Walton. We think the Farmers' Mutual stand such reports.

THE BRITISH AMERICAN JOURNAL.

This excellent periodical is again launched forth by its enterprising publishers and conductors for acceptance and support. Its pages are somewhat abridged, but promise, should adequate support be extended to it, to increase them to their original number. We sincerely hope that the Medical profession here and elsewhere will exert itself and save so useful a publication from going down. Its existence will depend upon immediate support, and we shall hail with delight its continuance, as such a work is a credit alike to the profession and the Province.

BIBLE SOCIETY.

The annual meeting, in connection with the above, will be held in the First Presbyterian Church, to-morrow (Friday) evening, commencing at 7 o'clock.

☞ The members of the Battery progress well in their drill. The kind offer of C. Perry, Esq., of his store-house, on McDonald Street, for a gun-shed and drill-room, has been accepted.

☞ Rumor has it that a certain disappointed candidate for Legislative honors has left this Town for Quebec, intent on upsetting the election of Col. Haultain, M. P. P., on grounds of illegality! What the bases of the grounds are we have not heard, but would advise the friends of the gentleman in question to bring him home at once, and save the annoyance and expense of a Lunacy commission.

☞ Between 500 and 600 persons were present at the Soiree in the First Presbyterian Church on Monday evening, and it was in every respect creditable. Not the least interesting and commendable feature in such social gatherings is the friendly intercourse it cultivates among members and adherents of the Churches.

The nett proceeds of the Soiree, after all expenses paid, amounted to $148:92. Proceeds of Sunday collections, $100.36.

Total,.....$249.28.

which sum goes to the credit of the building fund.

For the Examiner.

"LAWFUL GOVERNMENTS."

MR. EDITOR:—The aim of controversy should be the establishment of truth. Too often, however, it is entered into for the purpose of display, or of obtaining a victory over an opponent.

Truth has been likened to a sword with two edges, and in handling the weapon one must take care not to cut himself.—It is lawful to use it, and it should be used skillfully against its enemy error. Both C. S. D. and myself have been professing to use this sword, with what effect we know not—but it is clear we have failed in reaching one another as yet. Had my friend been skilled in the exercise of this weapon, methinks he would have met the declaration of the Southern Presbytery, by turning the sword upon it, in place of blunting one side of the instrument, or rather both.

The Presbytery uttered truth, it was truth however with one edge, and they meant it to apply to the Southern Confederacy only. I would have said to them: true, "the powers that be are ordained of God, there is no power but of God, whoso resisteth the power resisteth the ordinance of God, and shall receive condemnation,—the United States was that ordinance, and pray where is your warrant for secession?" Here the sword with its double edge cuts the Southern traitors off their feet, whilst my friend in seeking to condemn allows my justifies them in their rebellious doings, by laying down the erroneous and pernicious principle, that individuals themselves must be judges themselves of what sort of a government they shall be in subjection to. He surely cannot fail to see that the Southern people have acted upon his own theory, and the Presbytery in question in particular, with the light of the excellent confession of faith, and the host of work mentioned as holding views similar with C. S. D. Is it not plain that these "lights" have misled these people as they have misled my friend.

I much regret to find that he has recourse to so many questionable shifts to support his views and to condemn mine.

I advised him that I founded my views upon Divine truth, and if they were wrong to disprove them from the same source.—How does he try to do this? First by maintaining that the Apostle in giving directions to obedience to civil rulers is not to be understood literally, and imagines the consequences if it is. I reply that if you make one plain Apostolic injunction to be taken by me only in a qualified sense, why should I not take them all? "Fear God, love the brotherhood. Honor the king!" Why should I qualify the latter and not the other two? In the next place my friend, in order to show the absurdity of what he calls my views, but which I maintain are the Apostle's views, introduces the beast in the Revelations to whom Satan gave power—and speaks of spiritual wickedness in high places, and says that these according to my theory must be obeyed too. This I consider too silly to attempt to refute, and nothing in the whole of C. S. D.'s writings has convinced me more of his being off the track than this.

When a man loses himself so far it is a sign he has a bad cause, and is afraid of losing it. If my friend will only part with the views he has learned from men and come to the limpid waters of Divine truth, he will learn there his duty to both God and man. He surely does not need to be told that many wise, learned, and I may say in a sense good men have held and do hold the doctrine of Transubstantiation, which to him as well as to me is no proof of its correctness. Man is a dangerous guide in religious matters, and has been so in all ages of the world, and the errors so prevalent in the present day upon this as upon other points are traceable to the folly of persons who like my friend learn their views of duty from man and not from God. Apollos was mighty in the Scriptures and he convinced the Jews. Paul also from the same source opened and alleged the truth about Christ, and convicted many of his countrymen of their error. "The word of God makes the simple wise." "Beware," says the Apostle, "lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world and not after Christ."

I believe that C. S. D. gives up the task of his views on our duty to governments prior to 1776. I believe they are conformable to conformity with the Divine law, and the accidental mode of civil organization—but no further.

He gives us then for authority for holding this opinion, and the extract from Wesley proves that the mind is finding the kind. Does my friend want me to learn my duty to God and man from such erring guides? C. S. D., Wilson, and myself, may believe anything or nothing. Is that circumstance or any other to invalidate the Divine testimony? I state that neither the Apostle nor any other of the writers of the New Testament qualify the duty of obedience due to civil rulers, as C S D has done. Why should I heed then a person who seeks to teach for doctrines the commandments of men. "Let God be true," if every "man be a liar." Now listen to the teaching of Christ and His Apostles as to governments and our obedience thereto: "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's. Notwithstanding lest we should offend, go to the sea and cast a hook and take up the fish that first cometh up, and when thou hast opened his mouth thou shalt find a piece of money, that take and give unto them for thee and me." "Thou couldst have no power at all except it were given thee from above." Paul says, "Never against the laws of the Jews, neither against the Temple, nor yet against Cæsar, have I offended anything at all. Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers, for there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God; and they that resist shall receive damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou not then be afraid of the power? Do that which is good and thou shalt have praise of the same. For he is the minister of God to thee for good But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain, for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore, ye must needs be subject not only for wrath but also for conscience sake. For this cause, pay ye tribute also; for they are God's ministers attending continually on this very thing.—Render, therefore, to all their dues, tribute to whom tribute, custom to whom custom, fear to whom fear, honour to whom honour. I exhort, therefore, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men; for kings and for all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty. Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates." Peter says, "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake; whether it be to the king as supreme, or unto governors as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God, that with well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men. Fear God—honour the King. The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust until the day of judgment to be punished, but chiefly those who walk after the flesh, and despise government; they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities." And Jude says, "Likewise these filthy dreamers despise dominion and speak evil of dignities." I have now given high authority for obedience to the powers that be, and the consequence of disobedience. Let C. S. D. show for in the same authority, if he can, that these Scriptures are not to be taken literally. I may then be one with him, but until then I hold he cannot be right. God's truth, like a sunbeam, shines from its word. "There is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God," and we are to render to the powers obedience, as enjoined above.

Don't let C. S. D. retire from the controversy in a huff; his doing so will be taken as being unable to hold the high ground he took at the outset, and he only resigns it when driven off wounded and beaten. Yours truly,

E.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

THE BURNSIDE EXPEDITION.

ELIZABETH CITY BURNED BY THE REBELS.

CAPTURE OF ROANOKE ISLAND.

FORT MUNRO, Feb. 13.

The gunboat Stars and Stripes arrived this noon from General Burnside's expedition, with bearers of despatches for the Government. They report the route of the rebels as complete. 3 000 prisoners were captured and all their gunboats burned or captured, except two which escaped in the canal. The Federal loss in killed was 42; wounded about 140. The rebels killed about 30; and their wounded less than 100. The advance from Hatteras took place on Wednesday morning, the expedition consisting of about 60 vessels. The fleet anchored off Stumpy Point in the night and on the next day proceeded to the entrance of Croatan's Sound.

After a reconnoissance the attack was commenced on Friday morning. The ship Underwriter, leading the column.

The rebel fleet was attacked and dispersed in half an hour by the navy, while the remainder attacked the land batteries.

The fight continued till dark. During the night 10,000 men were landed, and on Saturday morning 700 more. A masked battery of three guns was soon discovered by the skirmishers, and was attacked in front and on both flanks. The fight lasted only two or three hours when this battery was abandoned. Our troops pursued and surrounded the rebel camp, and took nearly the whole command prisoners.

Our total loss in killed and wounded is less than 200, and the number of killed less than 50. We took between 2,000 and 3,000 prisoners, who were about being sent to New York in the S. R. Spaulding and other steamers. Among them were about 13 or 15 Colonels, Lieutenant Colonels and Majors.

On Sunday evening a fleet of 15 gunboats started for Elizabeth city. The place was shelled, and having been evacuated and partly burned by the rebel troops, was occupied. The rebel fleet was sunk or burned except two, the Roanoke and Beaufort, which escaped up the river.

The Seabird which was the flag ship of Com. Lynch, was run down and boarded, and the gallant Commodore escaped by swimming to the shore. The news from Elizabeth City was received at Philadelphia on Monday evening, and the Stars and Stripes left on Tuesday morning.—She struck on the bar at Hatteras on Tuesday night, but started again in the morning and arrived here at noon to-day. She brings bearers of despatches from General Burnside and Com. Goldsborough; she will take in a cargo of ammunition and return immediately.

Gen. Wise was at Nags Head, and succeeded in escaping to Norfolk. The rebels made no fight, after being driven from their strongholds by Wright's force, the storming parties till he was expended, when he was carried off the field and his command pushed with 100 others to the upper part of the Island, where they laid down their arms.

Elizabeth City was about half burnt by the rebels.

The people sent a deputation off to Com. Gold-borough, asking him to send a force to assist in extinguishing the flames.

Edenton was also taken possession of on Wednesday by Commodore Goldsborough, no opposition being offered.

Norfolk and Portsmouth papers attribute the loss of Roanoke Island to the blundering mismanagement of the navy. They still persist in asserting that 1,000 Federals were killed.

They also charge upon Roanoke Island farmers with deserting and piloting the Yankees to the only point where they could effect a landing—the landing being flanked on all sides by an extensive marsh.

Despatches from Memphis to Norfolk admit that the Federal flag was cheered on the Tennessee River by the people, and assert that the Federals neither caimed nor destroyed any private property, not even cotton.

Gov. Letcher has issued an order for the formation of Home Guards for the defence of Norfolk, Petersburg, and Richmond.

Bishop Atkins and Hon. Hamilton Fish returned to Baltimore, the rebels refusing to receive them.

400 Federal troops will reach Old Point on Friday or Saturday.

The Richmond Despatch says our Tennessee exchanges give us gloomy prospects for the future in that part of the Confederacy. Several leading journals intimate plainly that there is really a threatening state of affairs in East Tennessee growing out of the idolatrous love of those people for the old union.

The correspondent of the Memphis Avalanche writes that the condition of the interior counties is not improved by the lapse of time.

The people apprehended an immediate advance of the Northmen, and traitors to the South evince their joy in every village and neighborhood.

The Unionists are making demonstrations in many of the Northern counties, and even at Memphis there were exhibitions of joy on the arrival of the news from Beach Grove.

Armed bands of Johnston's and Maynard's followers are prowling about in all directions through the mountains.

In the remote counties many have been shot at night in their own houses who adhered to the fortunes of the South.

Springfield, Mo., Feb. 13,
Via Bear Creek, 14th.

Our troops took possession of Springfield to-day without firing a gun.

Gen. Price evacuated the place yesterday afternoon, marching out on the Fayetteville road.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 15.

The following despatch was forwarded from head quarters this morning to General McClellan, Washington:—

The flag of the Union floats over the Court House of Springfield.

The enemy retreated after a short engagement, leaving a large quantity of stores and equippage, which was captured by Gen. Curtis.

Our cavalry are in close pursuit.

(Signed,) H. W. HALLECK.

Chicago, Feb. 14.

The telegraph line hence to San Francisco is beginning to work through with considerable regularity and promptness.

To-day the public report from the New York Associated Press of San Francisco, which was despatched at 1.30 p. m., our time, was published in San Francisco at 11.30 a. m. 2 hours a-head of time.

Cincinnati, Feb. 13.

A special to the Commercial from Indianapolis says that reliable information from Fort Henry states that there were 30,000 troops at and near that place Sunday noon, and heavy reinforcements are constantly arriving.

The 13th Michigan passed through today en route for Kentucky. Five more will arrive next week.

A gentleman from Green River reports that 35,000 Federals had crossed Green River up to the time he left.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 13.

The Republican's Fort Henry correspondent gives further particulars of the Tennessee River gunboat expedition.—Everywhere the people insisted upon loading their visitors with presents, and so far as Florence the River can be navigated almost as safely as the Ohio. Blessings, cheers, and the wildest enthusiasm greeted the gunboats everywhere. Numbers of prominent men came forward and said, should the Union army enter, Tennessee, 50,000 men, ready and anxious to protect their homes, would at once cluster around it. Under the law to join the rebel army or loose their property they were obliged to succumb in self defence. The officers of the fleet say it is impossible to doubt the genuineness of the greetings of the vexed question:—

"No state or territory or district shall come into the State for permanent residence since this Constitution goes into operation."

This provision will insure a large majority for the Constitution.

Chicago, Feb. 13.

There was a general jubilee here to-day, accompanied by the ringing of bells, and firing of artillery, over the glorious success of Gen. Burnside and Commanders Goldsborough and Foote, which is hailed as the harbinger of a more vigorous policy in the conduct of the war.

Louisville, Feb. 18.

All is quiet down the road. Gen. Hinman is reported in Bowling Green. It is reported he is in consultation with reference to an evacuation.

LATER.

NORTHERN ADVANCE INTO TENNESSEE.

TWO DAYS' FIGHTING!

THE RESULT STILL DOUBTFUL.

Petersburg, Feb. 12.

The Editor of the Express has received a letter from Suffolk, dated Thursday, which says, Edenton and Hertford have both been captured. Five gun-boats moved slowly to the wharf at Edenton yesterday at 9 o'clock, and landed their troops. Very soon afterwards fifteen more gun-boats arrived.

The citizens raised the white flag. Between 2,000 and 4,000 troops landed at Edenton. The population of Edenton is about 2,000, and is distant from Suffolk about 50 miles. In the afternoon, two gunboats went up to the Chowan River toward Winton, and several others toward the mouth of the Roanoke.

A Nashville telegram of the 12th says that a despatch was received from Cumberland city this evening, stating that one Federal gun-boat had appeared at the fight at Fort Donelson, and this morning opened fire on the fort, but without injury to it.—The fort returned the fire and the gunboat retired. The Federals have landed a force and a battle with light artillery commenced this morning.

It is reported that the Federal force is from 10,000 to 12,000.

When the steamer left for Cumberland city the battle was raging with great earnestness. No further particulars have been received.

Nashville, Feb. 17.

The day has almost passed, and we still hold our own. We have repulsed the enemy at every point and driven back their gunboats. We have whipped them by land and water. He still lies around, probably to attack us to-morrow. Our loss is not very great, while that of the enemy must be heavy.

We have repulsed the enemy every where and we are satisfied that we have injured their gunboats materially, as we have made them retire twice.

Baltimore, Feb. 15.

Parties who came by the Old Point boat say it was reported in Norfolk that Fort Donelson had been captured. Our despatch from Fort Monroe makes no allusion to it, and it is only given as a street rumour.

A reliable passenger from Old Point says some workmen from the city works at Richmond, who came by the flag of truce, represent that they left there for want of work. So great was the scarcity of iron and coal that the works there were being suspended.

Gen. Phillip Kearney returned home last night, in consequence of the dangerous illness of his only son.

THE FIRST DAY'S BOMBARDMENT.

Chicago, Feb. 16.

A special to the Tribune, dated Cumberland river, near Fort Donelson, 15th, a.m., says the firing commenced again at daybreak and continued all day long up to 4 o'clock. No movement or assault by the land forces had been made.

The night before last an attempt was made by the rebels to take Taylor's battery of Light Artillery, but they were repulsed by two regiments and driven back beyond their intrenchments. Our loss in wounded is considerable, but not more than three or four are dangerously wounded.

Six gunboats arrived yesterday and commenced an attack on the Fort at 2 o'clock, p. m. The firing was very rapid and severe, and lasted one hour and twenty minutes, when our gunboats fell back. The four iron-clad boats went within 300 yards of the Fort. All the rebel River guns, except six, were either dismounted or silenced.—The first shot from the gunboat Louisville, dismounted the rebels' 128 pounder.

THE SECOND DAY'S BOMBARDMENT.

St. Louis, Feb. 16.

The city is wild with excitement and rejoicing. The news is just made public that the American flag waves over Fort Donelson. The loss is heavy on both sides. One of General Grant's batteries was taken by the rebels, but was re-captured by our troops. The gunboats are said to be badly damaged. Further particulars are expected to-night.

A gentleman who left Fort Donelson yesterday afternoon, says the fight had been going on all day yesterday.

The right wing of the enemy's fortifications was taken, and the Stars and Stripes were floating over it. The forces were breast to breast, and the fight was to be renewed.

THE THIRD DAY.

Cairo, Feb. 16.

The steamer Monmouth has arrived from Fort Donelson, having left the Fort at 5 o'clock yesterday morning, bringing the military mail and despatches, and 180 of the wounded to the hospital at Paducah.

The fight commenced on Thursday, and the contest of Friday and Saturday was desperate.

The Illinois 12th suffered severely, and the Iowa 7th sustained considerable loss. Swartz's battery, which was captured by the rebels, was recaptured by our men.

The rebels were crushed and cut to pieces. The fight commenced at four o'clock on the 13th, and is now raging over the city. Troops behaved with great gallantry.

The gunboats St. Louis, Louisville and Pittsburg were disabled.

The Carondelet sunk the mortar boats at Fleming, going up.

St. Louis, Feb. 18.

A despatch received at head-quarters says that all the gunboats are pretty effectually disabled, except one.

Gen. Pillow was wounded twice, but not fatally.

The upper rebel was taken by our troops. The steamboats left Donelson, and the rebels are reported to be [illegible]

Cairo, Washington, Feb. 46.

The following despatch was this day received at the Navy Department, from flag officer Foote, United States flag ship St. Louis, near Fort Donelson, Feb 15th:—

"To Hon. Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy:

"I made an attack on Fort Donelson yesterday at three o'clock, with four iron-clad gunboats and two wooden ones, and after an hour and a quarter of severe fighting, the latter part of the day, within less than 100 yards of the Fort, the wheel of two vessel and the tiller of the Louisville were rendered unmanageable. They then drifted down the river. The two remaining boats were also greatly damaged between wind and water. This vessel alone received 59 shots and the others about half that number each.

"There were 54 killed and wounded in this attack, which we have reason to suppose would in fifteen minutes more, could the action have been continued, resulted in the capture of the Fort bearing upon us, as the enemy was running from his batteries when the two gunboats drifted helplessly down the river, from the disabled steering apparatus, as the relieving tackle could not steer the vessels in the strong current.—When the flying enemy returned to the river battery guns, from which they had been driven, they again hotly poured fire upon us. The enemy must have brought over twenty guns to bear us from the water battery and the main fort upon the hill, while we could only return the fire from twelve boat guns, from the four boats. One rifled gun on board the Carondelet, burst during the action. The officers and men, in this hotly contested but equal fight, behaved with the greatest gallantry and determination; all deploring the accident which rendered two of our gun boats suddenly helpless in the narrow river and swift current. On consultation with General Grant and my own officers, as my services here—until we can repair damages by bringing up a competent force from Cairo to attack the fort—are much less required than at Cairo, I shall proceed to that place. I have sent the Tyler to the Tennessee River to render the railroad bridge impassible.

"Signed, A. H. FOOTE.

"Flag Officer Commanding."

St. Louis, Feb. 16.

LATER FROM MISSOURI.

GEN. PRICE OVERTAKEN.—HE RUNS AWAY

Gen. Halleck has received despatches from Gen. Curtis, stating that Gen. Price's rear guard was overtaken in the pursuit from Springfield; and after a brief resistance the rebels fled, leaving the road strewn with baggage and waggons.

Gen. Curtis reports having taken more prisoners than he knew what to do with.

Springfield, Mo., Feb. 14.

Our army, under command of Gen. Curtis marched from Lebanon on the 11th inst., and formed into three divisions,—the right under the command of Col D. Davis, the left under Col. Carr, and the centre under General Sigel.

Six miles from Springfield, on the 12th inst., a skirmish took place between our advance and a party of rebels—in which nine of the latter were killed. One of our men was slightly wounded.

At sunset on the same day, 300 of the enemy attacked our pickets, but were driven back with a loss of 30. This was regarded as the commencement of the battle, and 300 cavalry and infantry, with a battery of artillery, were sent forward. The battery was placed on an eminence commanding the supposed approach of the rebels, and three shells were thrown, from which no response was made, when our force retired, leaving a strong picket guard. During the night a continuous firing was kept up by the pickets.

At three o'clock on the morning of the General Cittendon is trying to organize another army at Carthage, on the south bank of the Cumberland. This is the only rebel force on the line from Bowling Green to Nashville.

General's Buckeridge and Hindman's brigades have been falling back on Russellville, where Gens. Buckner's and Floyd's brigades have been stationed for some time. Gens. Johnston and Hardee were also believed to be at that point on Friday.

It is believed that with the exception of the above brigade, the whole rebel army has been removed to Fort Donaldson and Clarksville.

What movements may have been made by the rebel forces can only be conjectured but the probabilities are that they have concentrated their whole force on the Cumberland.

The aggregate of the reinforcements is perhaps 40,000.

General Buell we understand goes with Gen. McCook's division to take command in person on the Cumberland, where our forces will be by to-morrow night 80,000 strong.

While he presses the enemy on the Cumberland with his tremendous force, their flank and rear are pressed by the heavy divisions under Generals Mitchell and Nelson.

Since writing the above, we learn that ten regiments now in Ohio camps are ordered at once to the Cumberland. If, however, they have not done so, the divisions of Generals Nelson and Mitchell will be ample to cope with all the enemy have at Bowling Green and Nashville.

It is believed that the divisions of Gens. McCook and Thomas embarked at the mouth of Salt River, on steamers, for the Cumberland, and that yesterday the troops which have been in camps of instruction at Bardstown, were at Louisville yesterday embarking for the Cumberland.

Three Indiana regiments and a battery of artillery will leave New Albany to-day.

Cairo, Feb. 17.

To Major General McClellan:—

The Union flag floats over Fort Donelson. The Carondelet brings the glorious intelligence. The Fort surrendered at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. Generals A. Sidney, Johnston and Buckner and 15,000 prisoners, and a large amount of material of war, are the trophies of the victory. Loss heavy on both sides.

Floyd, the thief, stole away during the night previous with 5,000 men, and is denounced by the rebels as a traitor.

I am happy to inform you that flag officer Foote, though suffering with his foot, with the noble characteristic of our navy notwithstanding his disability, will take up immediately two gunboats, and with the 8 mortar boats, he will make an attack on Clarksville, if the state of the weather will permit. We are now firing a national salute from Fort Cairo—Gen. Grant's late post, in honor of the glorious achievement.

(Signed) GEO. W. CULLUM,
Brig. Gen. of Volunteers, U. S. A. and Chief of Staff & Engineers, &c.

(Special to St. Louis Democrat.)

Springfield, Feb. 16.

According to the latest advices, the Federal army was in vigorous pursuit of the rebels. Price's army was on Crane Creek, 29 miles from here, on Friday evening, and our forces five miles in the rear, preparing to make an early start in the morning.—Gen. Price has placed his train in advance.

COTTON IN ILLINOIS.

It is estimated that Illinois alone will produce five hundred thousand bales of Cotton next year, and we understand that the Government of the United States have given instructions to their General in command of the Army in the South to have all the seed saved that is possible, for planting in that and other western States, but should their expectations not be fulfilled it is gratifying to know that we have a sovereign remedy for coughs, colds, cramps in the stomach, cholic, cholera morbus, and all complaints of the like nature, in the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," sold by all Medicine Dealers, 25 cts per bottle.

GREAT FIRE IN HAMILTON.

GRAIN ELEVATORS IN FLAMES.

By special telegraph to the Leader, we have just learned that the immense grain elevator at the Great Western Railway Station, Hamilton, are in flames, with no prospects of subduing the fire. The elevators were completely filled with grain and the loss will, consequently, be very great.

The Cobourg Star cautions its readers against counterfeit bills representing four dollar notes of the Bank of Upper Canada. It is an old Colonial Bill with the blanks filled up with the names of "P. G. Ridout" and "W. Proudfoot," both of which signatures are said to be very well executed. Across the top of the bill are printed the words, Bank of Upper Canada. In the centre of the bill is a good portrait of the Queen. It is altogether a good looking bill, but the peculiar buff color affords a sure means of detection, as it is totally unlike that of any other Bank-note now in circulation.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

A FIRST CLASS FAMILY NEWSPAPER

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF NORTH AMERICA, AND TO THE DISSEMINATION OF SCOTTISH LITERATURE AND NEWS.

FIFTH YEAR.

ON January 2nd 1862 was commenced a new volume (V.) of the Scottish American Journal; and in future the numbers issued will constitute a complete volume, of convenient size for binding; and each number will contain a most entertaining and instructive repertory of reading matter, calculated to interest all readers of British origin. The Scottish American Journal, though decidedly international in its constant efforts to promote peace and prosperity between the people of Great Britain and America, is yet emphatically Scottish in its special records of all events occurring in Scotland that can be regarded of the least interest to natives of that country residing in America; and to this "news from home" is added, weekly a summary of general intelligence from England, Ireland, and other parts of the world.

A distinguishing feature of the Scottish American Journal is its regular republication—verbatim et literatim—of the "leading articles" of the most influential British newspapers and periodicals upon the most important topics of the day. This feature is a unique one, and has been found very acceptable to the people of British North America, as is proved by the large list of Subscribers in the Provinces. In reference to the "editorials" of the Scottish American Journal, it is a significant fact that British journals frequently acknowledge their indebtedness to and even by copiously extracting from our columns and declaring that the Scottish American Journal is the most elaborate interesting paper published in America. A concise weekly summary is also given of the principal items of American news, and a similar chronicle of events transpiring in the various British Provinces, the latter feature supplying a deficiency which was felt in several of the numbers issued against as to what was transpiring in other parts of the British possessions.

In the forthcoming volume of the Scottish American Journal increased space will be devoted to the literary department in the publication of serial tales and sketches, vividly illustrating the country, habits, sentiments and general characteristics of the people of Scotland such subjects resulting from the pens of writers of celebrity. As here alone particular care will be exercised in the choice of original poetry, composed by writers of acknowledged genius and purity of thought, readers have or should. The first number of the new volume containing the commencements of a deeply interesting tale, entitled

THE LIEUTENANT & HIS SON.

This tale will prove to be one of the most interesting ever published, and will be appreciated by all classes of readers.

PREVENTION OF WOOD ROTTING.

To prevent posts and piles from rotting the following coating has been recommended, which is the more suitable since it is economical, impermeable to water, and nearly as hard as stone:—Take 50 parts of rosin, 40 of finely-powdered chalk, 300 parts (or less) of fine white sand, 4 parts of linseed oil, 1 part of native red oxide of copper, and 1 part of sulphuric acid. First heat the rosin, chalk, sand, and oil, in an iron boiler; then add the oxide, and with care, the acid; stir the composition carefully, and apply the coat while it is hot. If it be not liquid enough, add a little more oil. This coating, when it is cold and dry, forms a varnish which is hard as stone.

At the beginning and end of winter there is an appreciable quantity of nitric acid in the atmosphere. It is discovered by exposing iodized paper to its influence. The blue color of the paper soon becomes reddy paving air at such seasons through pure carbonate of lead the nitrate of lead is formed. The formation of verdigris on bronze statues exposed to the atmosphere shows the presence of nitric acid.

FRESH MAPLE MOLASSES.

A correspondent of Field Notes gives the following: Maple molasses well made and put in cans, and hermetically sealed, as you would can and seal fruits, will keep as fresh as when first boiled from the sap, and this is decidedly the best plan for keeping it, as when made in cakes, if exposed to the air, it will lose somewhat of the peculiar delightful flavour for which it is so prized, and is often injured by insects. All this is obviated by canning while hot. To many families who do not make it on a large scale, this need be but of little expense, as the cans that have been emptied through the winter can be used until autumn fruits demand them again. Put up your best in this way. Where large quantities are made for market, the buyers must select and can for themselves.

At the last meeting of the Illinois State Agricultural Society, at Springfield, Mr. J. H. Smith, of Quincy, exhibited one ton of sugar made by himself, from northern cane. He states that about seven-tenths of the syrup runs to sugar, and that he can make sugar at five cents per pound, and molasses at twenty-five cents per gallon, and realise more profit from an acre of cane than he can from an acre of corn.

NORTHERN TURPENTINE.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger directs public attention to the pine forest of New Jersey and Pennsylvania from which to obtain a supply of turpentine. He says: "The mode pursued for obtaining the juice,' of white or common turpentine, as it is called, is as follows:—A reservoir is made in the trunk of the tree, a few inches from the ground, capable of containing two or three pints of liquid. Into this, which should be prepared in the winter season, the juice will commence to flow early in the spring, increasing in quantity with the summer heats, and subsiding with the autumn. As the reservoir becomes filled the liquid is transferred to barrels, where it gradually thickens and becomes a soft solid. From this the spirits are distilled and the residue, as is well known, is common rosin."

TO FREE SWINE FROM VERMIN.

A writer in the Southern Planter says:—"If your hogs are lousy, go to their rubbing place, or what is better, take a rough twelve foot log to the feeding place, and keep it constantly smeared with tar. No spaniel ever loved water better than a lousy hog loves tar, and he applies it himself to the most infested parts of the body so effectually that the lice speedily disappear. I have seen 95 out of 96 hogs smear themselves with tar in less than 30 minutes after they had access to it; and not one had ever known its use before."

HINT TO CART-OWNERS.

A convenient way of raising the wheel of a tipup cart to grease the axle, or unfasten the body from the tongue, is to set a stick forward of the axle, under the side of the body, of suitable length to raise the wheel; then bear down the body and fasten to the tongue. The wheel is then ready to slip off at option.

WARTS.

The following is a very effectual and easy receipe for the cure of warts, in preference to lunar caustic: Wash a large-sized raw carrot in cold water. Then scrape with a knive the red or outer coat, and mix it with a quantity of salt. Apply this mixture to the parts affected, as a poultice, and after a fortnight's application the warts will entirely disappear.

TO STOP BLEEDING.

A correspondent of the American Agriculturist writes that bleeding from a wound in man or beast may be stopped by a mixture of wheat flour and common salt in two parts bound on with a cloth. If the bleeding be profuse, use a large quantity, say from one to three pints. It may be left on for hours, or even days, if necessary.

MATRIMONIAL.

Not love in a cottage, unless it be in the suburbs, but love in an attic, (but not too high up, either) has always been my fancy. We will make our attic as extensive as possible, and there shall be a garden about us on the roof, if it must be. I want to live near the sky. That is my taste. And what with books and with art, with poetry and divine philosophy, and with dear love in the house in and over all, and with some fair Eve to share it with me and by "sharing doubling, what she shares," I think my Eden would be endurable. Any lady who likes the picture and would like to make one for its realization, will please address Adam, Box No. 144, Tribune Buildings.

AMONG the most important of modern Medical discoveries stands the Canadian Pain Destroyer. As a Family Medicine it is well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pains from Side, Back and Head, Coughs, Colds Sore Throats, Sprains, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbis, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Burns, Scalds, Frost bites, &c.—The Canadian Pain Destroyer has now been before the public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single instance of dissatisfaction, where the directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its virtues and magical effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it thoroughly, and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon it being a sovereign remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, incuring the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the torturing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. Orders are coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the Country for further supplies, and each testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

The Canadian Pain Destroyer never fails to give immediate relief. All Medicine dealers keep it. Physicians order and use it; and no family will be without it after once trying it.—Price only 25 cents per bottle. All orders should be addressed to Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, C. W.

THE FOUND WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING.

A perfect Antidote, Specific and Cure for

RHEUMATISM & NEURALGIA

has long been need d. After earnest and patient research, this has been triumphantly discovered. It is called

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING!

Watson's Neuralgia King reaches the source of the trouble, and banishes the disease from the system. Unlike the untold number of Liniments and Embrocations which merely stimulates the surface, are but temporary in their effects, and are, at best, of doubtful virtue, it STRIKES AT THE SEAT OF THE AILMENT, ARRESTS IT, KILLS IT, ERADICATES IT, and leaves no trace behind.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING also cures GOUT AND DYSPEPSIA, in all their forms. It is now giving relief to thousands who have been suffering form these diseases, and who have tried all other remedies in vain.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING has received the highest testimonials from the highest sources in regard to its wonderful efficacy. It operates with equal success in mild and chronic cases, never failing to work out a speedy and permanent cure.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING costs but one dollar a bottle, and less than a bottle often effects the end desired.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING is the only Specific and cure for Rheumatism and Neuralgia that has ever been discovered.

JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH

SPRATTS' RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!

AND ENLARGED

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

—:o:—

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers; is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod Professor Croft has a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, easing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fail in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Common Iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPerintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

Above we present you with a perfect likeness of Tecumseh, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

The Inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was thus that the "Mountain Herb Pills" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, "but all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and disordered. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed the lamp of life soon dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Fits, Measles, &c. &c. This Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the bilious seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and sweet, clearing and remedying the vital organs.

Prepared indeed, is it to us, that we are also to place within your reach, a medicine like the "Mountain Herb Pills," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

GREAT FEMALE MEDICINE

Females who value health, should never be without these Pills. They purify the blood, remove obstructions of all kinds, cleanse the skin of all pimples and blotches, and bring the rich color of health to the pale cheek.

☞ The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Tecumseh, a tribe of Aborigines in Mexico. See the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "Great Discovery" of the Aztecs.

Observe,—The Mountain Herb Pills are put up in a Beautiful Wrapper. Each box contains 50 pills, and Sealed at 25 cents per box. All genuine have the signature of B. L. JUDSON & CO., on each box.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, to combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proved by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, TUMORS, BLOTCHES, BOILS, TETTER, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, AND indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but wash this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is deranged or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these cures. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or nay thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

HOME.

Home's not merely four square walls,
Though with pictures hung and gilded,
Home is where affection calls—
Filled with shrines the heart hath builded.
Home! go'vernor the faithful dove,
Sailing 'neath the heaven above us,
Home is where there's one to love,
Home is where there's one to love us.

Home is not mere roof and room,
It needs something to endear it;
Home is where the heart can bloom,
Where there's some kind lip to cheer it.
What is home with none to meet?
Home to welcome—none to greet us.
Home is sweet—and only sweet—
Where there's one who love to meet us.

JOSEPHINE:

THE STORY OF THE OLD SHOES, AND OTHER MATTERS.

After the divorce of the amiable Josephine from her second husband, Napoleon, she retired to Malmaison, a pleasant country residence not far distant from Paris. Here, though retaining the title of empress, she lived in comparative seclusion till the period of her death in 1814. Some time before her lamented decease, she was visited by two young ladies of her acquaintance, whose interview with her is thus described by one of the party, in the Memoirs of Josephine:—"It happened to us to request of the empress to show us her diamonds, which were locked up in a concealed cellar. She yielded with the most willing compliance to the wishes of such giddy girls as we were, ordered an immense table to be brought into the saloon, upon which several of her maids-in-waiting laid a countless number of caskets of every form and shape. They were spread upon that spacious table, which was absolutely covered with them. On the opening of the caskets, we were perfectly dazzled with the brilliancy, the size, and the quantity of jewels composing the different sets. The most remarkable after those which consisted of white diamonds, were in the shape of pears, formed of pearls, perfectly regular, and of the finest colour; opals, rubies, sapphires, and emeralds, were encircled with large diamonds, which were, nevertheless, considered as mere mountings, and were taken in to account in the estimation made of those jewels. They formed altogether a collection which I believe to be unique in Europe, since they consisted of the most valuable objects of that description that could be found in the towns conquered by our armies. Napoleon was never under the necessity of seizing upon objects, which there was always evinced the utmost anxiety to offer to his wife; the garlands and bouquets formed of such a countless number of precious stones had the effect of verifying the truth of the descriptions hitherto so fanciful, which are to be met with in the fairy tales. None but those who have seen this splendid collection can form an adequate idea of it.

"The empress seldom wore any other than fancy jewels; the sight, therefore, of this exhibition of caskets, excited the wonder of most of the beholders. Her majesty greatly enjoyed our silent admiration. After having permitted us to touch and examine everything at our leisure—'I had no other motive,' she kindly said to us, 'in ordering my jewels to be opened before you, than to spoil your fancy for such ornaments. After having seen such splendid sets you never can wish for inferior ones; the less so when you reflect how unhappy I have been, although with so rare a collection at my command. During the first dawn of my extraordinary elevation, I delighted in these trifles, many of which were presented to me in Italy. I grew by degrees so tired of them, that I no longer went any except when I am in some respects compelled to do so by my new rank in the world; a thousand accidents may, besides, contribute to deprive me of those brilliant though useless objects. Do I not possess the pendants of Queen Antoinette? and yet, am I quite sure of retaining them? Trust to me, ladies, and do not envy a splendour which does not constitute happiness. I shall not fail to surprise you when I relate that I felt more pleasure at receiving an old pair of shoes, than at being presented with all the diamonds which are now spread before you.' We could not help smiling at this observation, persuaded as we were that Josephine was not in earnest; but she repeated her assertions in so serious a manner that we felt the utmost curiosity to hear the story of this wonderful pair of shoes.

"'I repeat it, ladies,' said her majesty: 'it is strictly true that the present, which of all others has afforded me most pleasure, is a pair of old shoes of the coarsest leather, you will readily believe it when you shall have heard my story.' I had set off with my daughter Hortense, from Martinique, in the West Indies, on board a ship in which we received such marked attentions, that they are indelibly impressed on my memory. Being separated from my first husband; my pecuniary resources were not flourishing; the expense of my return to France, which the state of my affairs rendered necessary, had nearly drained me of everything; and I found great difficulty in raising the pecuniary which were indispensably requisite for the voyage. Hortense, who was about, fourteen, many years ago, and performed couple dances with considerable accuracy; and was the first pet of the officers, and in every fashionable functions, she was made them her partner on every occasion. The minor fell entirely upon Josephine, and she was obliged to be content with the second rank in the estimation of the officers of the vessel, and her feelings were frequently wounded by the neglect and contempt with which she was treated by the young midshipmen, who, in consequence of their situation, had been accustomed to be regarded as of no small consequence, though her vanity was gratified by the respect which was paid to her daughter, and by the attentions which were lavished upon her. Every day, however, brought us nearer to the end of our voyage, and I was already dreaming of the delights of Paris, when, on the morning of the 7th of October, the ship struck upon a sand-bank, and remained immovable. The consternation which this accident occasioned among the passengers and crew was extreme. Every one thought only of himself, and of the means of saving his life. The boats were immediately lowered, and filled with the officers and crew, who, in their haste, left behind them all the provisions, and even the water. Hortense and I were left alone on the deck, and, as the vessel was in a dreadful state, we were afraid to venture into the cabin. We were, therefore, obliged to remain on deck, exposed to the heat of the sun, which was intolerable. Hortense, who was very delicate, was soon attacked with a violent fever, and I was in the greatest distress, when I perceived a boat coming towards us. It was the captain, who had returned to the ship, and who, with the greatest humanity, had come to our assistance. He had left the ship, expecting that the vessel would go to pieces, and, being poor, his neighbours raised a subscription for him of 920. The money was placed in the hands of one man, in whose honour he was brought to the vessel in this way. There he left his shoes

...The hold few weeks give promise of stirring events. Northern blood is at boiling heat by reason of the late success of the federal arms. This is the time to look for early active action. The fall of Fort Donelson took place soon after the capture of Fort Henry; and both events occurred so close upon the capture of Roanoke, on the Atlantic coast, that these triumphs are likely to be followed up. Tennessee is, for the present, the great theatre of war. This is the first rebel State which has been entered from the North; and there will doubtless be a struggle for its possession before it is allowed to pass from the Confederacy.—There is no reason to doubt that there is a strong Union feeling in this State. The North has always relied on the existence of this feeling to bring the State back to its old allegiance; and it may be of service now, that success appears for the time to be on the side of the Federal troops. But there is some fighting to be done before this result can be attained. The fact is not generally known that the Southern generals did not anticipate such resistance from Fort Donelson as they encountered, and there was good ground for the belief; for it appears that it was but lately that the fort was strengthened to that degree which enabled it to make such a desperate stand against the Federal forces. "The impression was so general," says the New-York Times, "that the preparations at Cairo were intended for Columbus, Memphis and New Orleans, that little interest was felt in the defences of the Tennessee and the Cumberland." Still, that Fort Donelson was immensely strong is shown by the hard fighting and great slaughter which took place before it surrendered. The next place from which we may expect to hear of a battle is Clarksville, further down the Cumberland River. Commodore Foote has announced his intention of pushing on to this place with eight mortar-boats, and the only two gunboats not disabled at Fort Donelson; and General Buell was preparing to make a land advance upon the same town by way of Bowling Green. The Confederate force which for some time was stationed at this place has been withdrawn, and will, in all probability, take up a defensive position at Clarksville. It is doubtful whether Clarksville is strong enough to make an effectual resistance. General Beauregard, perhaps the best military engineer in the States, who is in command in that quarter, will not be likely to halt his forces there, unless he sees some probability to check the Federal forces. If he should think it undesirable to make resistance at Clarksville, he will concentrate all his strength at Nashville. What forces he may have under his command we have no means of knowing; but the Federalists say they will be able to bring together from 80,000 to 100,000 men at this place. It cannot be long till the armies meet. And then another desperate encounter. Should the Northern forces be able to take this city, and make their way to New Orleans—though, in any event that will take time—it is very problematical how far they would have succeeded in putting an end to the "rebellion." Gen. McClellan is reported to have likened his plan of attack to an anaconda, which is to fold its coils around the rebel States, and then crush it out effectually. The figure is forcible; and all the desirable results attributed to it may be brought about.

THE STONE FLEET.

Our American friends, over apt to find, in the faults of others, some matter of congratulation for themselves, greatly enjoyed the mishaps that befel us in the Crimea. It was then flatteringly suggested that we were getting too beef-headed for any work requiring either energy or inventiveness. It was waggishly hinted that we had better withdraw our soldiers, and get a smart Yankee or two to estimate for the reduction of Sebastopol, and do it by contract. It was confidently asserted that, if we were to let the job to Americans, it would be done quickly, neatly, and for a small trifle of dollars. The wheel of Time has taken a short turn, and our boasting cousins are showing that they excel in blunders, as well as boasts; and, of all their many mistakes, this last one of the stone fleet is the most amusing. When the news first reached us that a whole fleet of whalers had been bought and filled with stones for sinking, we never doubted but the vessels so laden would be scuttled at some point where they would stretch in a line from shore to shore, and so effectually barricade with a continuous bar the harbour or river in which they might be placed. What are we to think of American cleverness when we find this fleet sunk in the middle of the mouth of an estuary six miles wide! Under the impression that three lines of hulks, placed across that Indentation in the south bottom of the river called "The Channel," would finally shut up an estuary which receives the waters of three respectable rivers, some amazing genius has so disposed of them. Was not that a wonderful achievement? At the very next ebb tide, the combined waters of the Ashley, the Cooper, and Wando rivers, would begin to scoop themselves new channels at each side of the monster barricade; and we dare venture to assert that by this time there is deeper water on the bar than there was before the stone fleet was placed there. Every pilot knows that sand will move, and does move about like quick silver; and the first effect of the costly obstruction, placed in the ordinary channel, would be to clear up the downward current in the centre of the frith, and cause it to roar and scour along at the sides in currents so vehement as to set like a dredging machine of many thousand horse-power. We need not wonder to hear, that since the ships were sunk (and all the money they had cost sunk with them, too) in such steamers like the Rama Wathy ran in and out, and mock at the folly which sought to block up an arm of the sea, by sinking a few ships in the part where the water was deepest. We may spare ourselves the trouble of protesting against the stone blockade of Charleston, for if it has been carried out in the way reported, we may be sure that the combined forces of these considerable rivers have by this time very effectually opened up a new, and not improbably a better channel than the one which the Federalists have, with such impotent malice attempted to destroy.

MR. FAULKNER ON SECESSION.

Mr. C. J. Faulkner was, during the Presidency of Mr Buchanan, United States Minister to Paris. On the breaking out of the rebellion it was alleged that his endeavours to enlist the Emperor on the side of the South. He was ultimately arrested in New York and confined in Fort Lafayette. Finally, he was exchanged for Mr Ely who was then prisoner at Salt Rock. On Saturday night, at a meeting, Mr Faulkner stated that he had formerly been a slaveholder, and a resident of Virginia, but Providence had so ordered that the policy of Secession all it had chosen carried no weight with him. It had been consummated without a necessary notice of using the last means of conference and the ordinary meetings of peoples. Secession was continued in, it would pile rule on rule, ...

"The patriotic sentiment of Western Virginia was opposed to it. He also intimated that he had no affiliation with those who wished the present war to continue. His remarks were acquiesced in by the large audience present, and he had no doubt but they reflected the true sentiments of nine-tenths of the people of the upper counties of the Potomac.

THE FALL OF FORT DONELSON.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 18.

The following is a graphic account of the fight at Fort Donelson:

On Saturday morning the battle was resumed with unusual vigor and determination. The 8th, 18, 20, and 31st Illinois regiments occupied a position above the fort. They were about preparing a little food when the Confederates opened on them a fire of musketry. The line of battle was at once formed, and the storm of leaden hail returned perceptibly thinning the Confederate ranks. The Confederates from their advantageous position showered upon our ranks one murderous volley of musketry, grape and canister, killing and wounding our men almost by companies by every round, yet every man stood his ground bravely determinedly, without flinching. These four regiments held their ground dealing death, dying and fighting against appalling odds, and in the face of every advantage. The 18th regiment seems to have resisted several storm. Against their ranks the Confederates directed their heaviest fire but instead of falling back they advanced to the very face of the enemy, and there stood in the very jaws of death, with scarcely a prospect that a single one would escape. For three hours these regiments, numbering scarcely 3,000 men, held their ground against the whole Confederate garrison. At one time the 18th, being partially flanked, was exposed to a cross fire of both musketry and artillery, but our right wing securing the Confederates' left, at once relieved them. At this critical moment Col. Lawler fell. Captain Bush, acting lieutenant-Col. assumed command, but was soon wounded. Captain Crane was shot dead. Captain Lowler was mortally wounded. Lieutenants Mansford and Thompson were killed. Captains Dillon and Wilson and Lieutenants Kelly and Scanlon were wounded. So that the daring Egyptian regiment stood before an overwhelming fire almost without officers. They fell in heaps, dead and wounded. Companies were bereft of captains and lieutenants, and captains almost bereft of companies. The other 3 regiments fought nobly. Cols. Oglesby, Walsh and Logan dashed along the ranks, and cheered their men to the conflict—"Suffer death, men," cried Logan, "but disgrace never. Stand firm," and well they heeded him, many fell dead and wounded; among the latter Col. Logan and Lieut-Col. White. Oglesby's and Marsh's regiments fought desperately, losing, like other regiments, an undue proportion of officers. Col. Oglesby displayed coolness and courage that elected the highest praise and served well in stimulating his men. Never, perhaps, on the American continent has a more bloody battle been fought. An officer who was wounded in the fight says the scene beggars description. So thickly was the battle field strewn with the dead and wounded that he could have traversed acres of it, taking almost every step upon a prostrate body. The Confederates fought with desperation, their artilleries using their pieces with most fearful effect. On either side could be heard the voices of those in command cheering on their men. The four Illinois regiments held their ground fully three hours. Nearly one-third had been killed and wounded, yet the balance stood firm; finally reinforcements arrived and for one hour the slaughter continued, until about 4 o'clock. Our right wing turned their left, and the Confederates fell back into the fortifications, and our flag was planted upon the position occupied by their left wing, and from that time the slaughter ceased. Dresser's and Schwartz's batteries were captured during the action, but the 18th Illinois with clubbed muskets recovered Dresser's, while the 31st recovered Schwartz's.

ENGLAND'S MAGNANIMITY.

The Montreal Advertiser, commenting on that part of the French Emperor's speech from the throne, wherein he says: "The civil war which devastates America has greatly injured our commerce; but so long as the rights of neutrals continue to be respected, we must content ourselves with expressing our hopes of a speedy pacification"—very appropriately remarks as follows:

"At the last moment the Emperor of the French has been induced by the British Government to delay his intended recognition of the Confederate States. Great Britain, which has been the recipient of unmeasured abuse and wrong from the United States, has used her powerful influence to prevent France, upon which the North has fawned with base servility, from rendering a reconstruction of the Union impossible.

"It is a grand spectacle to behold the mother country thus returning good for evil to her most bitter and persistent enemy; and she will reap the usual reward of noble generosity bestowed on ungrateful natures in the misrepresentation of her motives, and more causeless and unreasoning hatred.

"It is a triumph to know that England holds the destiny of the United States in her hand; and that after enduring a succession of unmerited wrongs from its government and people, she has had the magnanimity to refuse to assist in their humiliation; but it is to be regretted that she has again wasted generosity on those who are incapable of appreciating it and who will wait impatiently for the time when they can make their ingratitude apparent."

CANADA AT THE INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.

The Canadian News of the 30th of January says:—We have been favoured with a view of the ground plan of the Exhibition as regards the space allotted to British North America generally, and to Canada in particular, and it affords us much pleasure in being able to state that the location for Canada's exhibitors in all that could be desired. The space set apart for the Canadian department is immediately on the right of the Eastern or Exhibition road entrance, and at this will be one of the chief points of departure from, as well as of entry to the building, no better site could have been chosen, having regard to the other arrangements of the building. The superficial area gained by the Canadian Commissioners was 5,000 feet, but this quantity has since been increased by the powers of the Commission to great. At first it was intended only to cover 12,000 feet on Canada's behalf, but this quantity has since been increased to 17,000 feet, and it is probable that even this will be found insufficient. ... [illegible] ... had the whole of the space originally intended for Canada been secured for which application was made, Canada would have had to occupy, [illegible] ... filling it to advantage, full, with 3,000 feet ... of superficial area at her command the exhibition of her products and her progress in the arts and manufactures need be none the less effective. Canada, in the Exhibitions of London and Paris, undoubtedly held the first place as regards the display of material wealth and productive capacity and we shall be much disappointed if in May next she does not in this same respect occupy the same proud position.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1862.

THE MILLBROOK BRANCH AND THE £26,000 SUIT.

Our readers generally are aware that when the Town of Peterborough agreed to assist in building a branch line from this to Millbrook there was a general opinion that the railroad built by the intrepid Cobourgers across Rice Lake could not be depended upon to do the business required by this place, and consequently it was necessary to look around and ascertain how we could reach the front by rail by a more reliable road than that across Rice Lake. It was soon decided that connection with Port Hope could be had by a Branch to Millbrook. The Port Hope people were delighted with the idea of securing the trade of Peterborough, at a time when sober sense had in a measure returned to them, and they were led to realize the folly of incurring such fearful debts for securing a questionable benefit. The trade of Lindsay would hardly pay for the oil used in running the cars—so out they came and held meetings and promise all sort of things; and honest John Fowler tells us if we will only go in for building the road, he will take £10,000 stock, and lease the road from us and guarantee to pay us 6 per cent on our stock. We had quite a number of orators among ourselves who painted in glowing colors the immense benefits that would result to our Town, if we would but go into the arrangement. Some of these took special pains to brush aside all the dust and cobwebs which are usually found in railroad schemes, and insisted that this was a bona fide measure; and so confident were they that we should derive the benefits pointed out, and the payment of the rent by the Lessee, that some of them (verbally) mortgaged some of their limbs as security for the realization of all and every the promises held out. The result of all these "splendid schemes" was a resolve that the Branch road should be built; and for this purpose Peterborough should advance £30,000, Port Hope £10,000, and honest John Fowler £10,000, which sums together was the amount required to build the road. It must be observed here that this "scheme" had its opponents in this Town. We have cool and clear headed men among us who saw through the mists of the railway mania then so prevalent, and they pointed out the danger of our associating with a bankrupt company, as well as the folly of our placing any confidence in the promises of a railway black-leg. The result of this opposition led the Town Council to seek legal opinion as to whether we could do as we intended—join the Company and yet be free from liability to pay its debts. Two opinions of high authority agreed that in taking stock in the Company we were de facto a part of that Company, and, as such, liable to the amount of our stock. Some of our lawyers and others more sanguine than wise, thought differently, and somehow managed to conceal the true nature of the opinions referred to, and the counsel of these latter and of the Port Hope chief operators prevailed, and Peterborough through its Mayor subscribed for £30,000 worth of stock. It was agreed that Peterboro should pay to the contractor, John Fowler, the amount of its subscription, which it did to the last cent. It is now nearly four years since the Branch was opened, and although the sum of £2,700 was due as last November by the Lessee, John Fowler, this municipality has not yet received one dollar from him. It is plain that the said Lessee has broken his promises with us. He uses our road, pockets the gains he makes from it, and grins at us when we make a demand for our rent. One of the most anxious souls for the Town to go into the Company, and who was positively eloquent in his description of the benefits to the Town by such a course, and who seemed ready to endorse the new case of the Lessee to pay the 6 per cent, is the Agent and manager-in-chief for the said John Fowler; and despite the unsatisfied mortgage on the limb, he has never yet shown a desire that the Town should get a dollar of the money justly due—if we except his effort last summer to induce the Town to accept a poundage for the amount owing. The Town rejected the proposition of receiving £900 for £2,700, and in future £900 or £1,000 a year instead of £1800. Some time in December last a writ was served on the Mayor from the executor of the late Mr. Zimmerman, who, it will be remembered, was the contractor of the Port Hope, Lindsay and Beaverton Railway. This was claimed to be over £26,000, and is for interest on bonds issued by the said Railway Company. The first of our being stockholders warrants the action, and the ground taken to sustain the demand is that having subscribed for stock we should not have paid that stock but by order of the Company. Such an order not existing, the said we are consequently liable now to pay it to the proper creditor of the Company, Mr. Zimmerman. The suit is pending before the Judges, and like all other cases in law, very uncertain. We may be required to pay the amount, or we may be compelled to give up our stock and forfeit to the road. The latter appears it still to be the intention of the Port Hope people to do, for they have the power, as the majority of the stock is in their hands. We give here the views of Port Hope lawyers, and the opinion of the Town Solicitor, who has had the whole of the case in charge, and has prepared for which application was made to the Court of Chancery, and which will be heard during the present week. Should the decision be against us, we shall be called upon to pay the amount of our stock, £2,000 and interest, at 6 per cent.

The Council adjourned till Thursday, 20th instant, at 7 o'clock.

...we go to the wall. We entered into the undertaking in good faith, and on the reiterated assurances of the advocates of the road that we should receive the proposed rent from the Lessee, in place of which we have to pay yearly £1,750 to interest on our bonds, and this sum does not cover the amount actually owing. It is, however, all that is required or demanded of us, and it is paid. A proposal was made last summer by Mr. Covert, the partner of the Lessee, to compound with us for our interest in the Branch. It was that we should forego our interest therein, by his paying us about £900 in three months, and thereafter to pay the 5 cents in the dollar required from us by the Government. We were required to give up our mortgage and interest, and certain bonds of the Port Hope, Lindsay and Beaverton Railroad Company were to be hypothecated security for the carrying out the proposed arrangement. The matter was submitted to the Railway Committee and the Town Council, who approved of the proposition, and efforts were made to obtain the sanction of Parliament. It was found that the consent of the ratepayers of the Town was required before such a measure could be entertained by the Legislature. That consent was sought in the legal way, but was refused, and so the matter dropped. The present action is said to be at the instance of the bondholders, who seem determined to wrench from us our interest in the road—especially for our refusal to accept the offer of last summer. It is said also that these very bonds, the cause of the present action, are the same that were offered as security for the carrying out the arrangement. It seems we are fallen, if not among the Philistines, certainly among the Jabnaelites, who unite in saying, "Since you will not take our offer, you shall get nothing, and we will strip you beside." We sicken at every recital of the iniquitous procedure of these railway operators, and are ready to exclaim with the poet, "O, for a lodge in some vast wilderness,"—where railroads never come.

THE REPRESENTATION QUESTION.

Now that Parliament is called for the despatch of business, we look with eagerness to the "organs" for some foreshadowing of the Government policy, but beyond a very slight reference to the question of Representation by Population, we see nothing. On this subject, even, they proceed timidly, seeming to fear the consequences if they speak too freely their own feelings or those of the Ministry. The London Prototype, however, is more frank than the rest of his brethren, and in a late issue he says:—

"The subject of municipal indebtedness we also hope will be discussed. It is of far greater consequence to us than Representation by Population,—a matter, we believe, that will not excite great attention in the first session of this new Parliament."

We have no doubt the Prototype speaks with some authority. We never believed the Smiths and Morrisons of the Coalition sincere when they favored the great question before the people, at the elections.—The people of Upper Canada were in earnest in the just demand, and Ministers and their Parliamentary supporters saw the hopelessness of their case if they did not pledge themselves to support the measure. The elections came and passed, and many of M. Cartier's friends managed, through their false pledges, to secure the confidence of constituencies. The House is now about to meet, and as we look anxiously to the pages of the Ministerial organs to catch a glimpse of Government intentions on the important measure, we are met with the unmistakeable announcement that the subject of Municipal indebtedness, or relief, is of "far greater importance to us than Representation by Population!"

Just as we expected. It is of little consequence now, it will be of no consequence at all before another Session, and so it will remain until it is revived for the purpose of humbugging the people, at future elections.

How long will the people of Upper Canada suffer to be made the dupes of deceitful, juggling politicians?

CURLING MATCH.

A friendly game was played on the ice on Little Lake, on Tuesday last, between 6 Keene, and 6 Peterboro, resulting after three hours keen playing, for Peterboro, of 6 shots best. We understand that a return match will be played at Keene in a few days,—day not yet fixed.

We are glad to see the good old game revived here; a more interesting and exhilirating sport there is not than the ancient game of curling.

ROOM PAPER DEPOT.

—As will be seen by advertisement in another column Mr. Wm. N. Kennedy has commenced business in the painting and paper-hanging line in the shop formerly occupied by Mr. R. Stevenson. Mr. Kennedy is a young man of considerable talent in his profession, and we hope he will succeed.

MUNRO'S PATENT MODEL GRIST MILL.

We notice with pleasure a new invention by Mr George Munro, miller, of Blythe Mills, called a Patent Model Grist Mill. The object of the invention is to give persons having grists done at a mill, the exact flour their wheat has produced, and of a much better quality than is produced by the present machinery. Mr Munro also claims for his mill that it will produce 2 lbs. more flour to the bushel than can be done by the ordinary grist bolts. All practical millers and mill wrights who have examined it pronounce it a great improvement on the present system of grist grinding.

CORRECTION.

—We inadvertently fell into an error last week in using the name of John S. Smith for that of James Smith. The former has been so mixed up with the Railroad that it seemed natural when speaking of a Smith and a Railroad, to name him. In mentioning his name in connection with the naming process, and all the hard expressions employed therewith, we apologise to him. Had we but reflected we might have known that he gets up too early of a morning to get caught. He obtained the amount of his judgment some time ago.

☞ We clip the following from the Leader, and wish to know whether it was father or son who was for many years a member of Parliament, and was in the Turkish army as surgeon. Perhaps our contemporary, or some one, will answer our queries:

Mr. Fraser, one of the Bureau of Agriculture, has just received from the Sultan of Turkey, through Sir F W Williams, of Kars, and Col. Paynter, commanding the garrison, the order of Medjidie, and the Asiatic medal for distinguished services before and at Kars. Mr Fraser is a son of Col. R D Fraser, of Edwardsburg, C. W., who was for many years a member of the Provincial Parliament, and was in the Turkish army, as surgeon on the staff of General Guoyan at the time of the celebrated siege.

☞ At a meeting of the Council of North Monaghan, on Monday the 26th instants the following appointments were made:

FAST DRIVING.

A match for $400, between Hindes' chestnut horses against time, from Peterborough to Port Hope, a distance of 30 miles—Hindes betting that he could go the distance inside of 2½ hours. A. Niblock, took the bet. Harry Morgan's matched mares followed through, trotting it in 2 hours, 18 minutes, and could have trotted it in less than 2 hours, with four persons in the sleigh, viz., Jas. Chambers, A. Niblock, H. Morgan, and R. H. Crean. C. Stapleton, acted as umpire and judge of time, and rode with Hindes. Hinde's horses breaking badly, the bet was not decided. The driving was through the most severe snow-storm of the season.—COM.

MR. BENJAMIN DEFEATED.

The Hastings Chronicle says that at the January municipal election for the village of Hungerford, ward No. 1, Mr. Benjamin was returned by the casting vote of the Returning Officer. It was well known in the ward that the names of some supporters of Mr. Jones (who was Mr. B.'s opponent) had been fraudulently left off the voters' list, and by this means Mr. Benjamin was elected. Mr Jones applied to the Court to set aside Mr. B.'s election, and Mr Justice Richards did set it aside, and ordered a new one to be held. It was hard to eradicate the fixed and cherished practice of committing frauds of some kind or other on occasion of an election for this ward, but the fear of consequences operated partially as a check this time. Mr. Benjamin was defeated, and a majority of 17 recorded against him. As the county election was carried by the same contrivance by which Mr. B. secured his first return for this ward, his present defeat is more than usually significant. Some few who voted for Mr. B. at the first election voted against him at this last simply upon the ground that they did not believe him free from complicity with the conduct by which the ward was defrauded before. Now, we trust that the assessors who were appointed with such indecent haste at the very first meeting of the Hungerford Council, will either be superseded or be taught that 'there is a law against making up assessors' lists with a view to election rather than for assessment purposes, and that they also can be reached; and as for the Clerk, it would simply be disgraceful to allow him any longer to have the custody of any public document. To this very unsavoury roll and voters' list, emanating from this same Clerk, Mr. Benjamin owes his election for the North Riding, and the constituency have to submit, through his misconduct, to be represented by a man who has not a majority of the votes legally given at the county election. After the ward election was over, and Mr. Jones declared duly elected, a procession, composed of upwards of seventy sleighs, formed and went to the village of Trent, where Mr. Jones was carried in a chair through almost every street in the village,—and when opposite the Clerk's domicile three hearty groans were given for him, and an address, deliberately indignantly contemptuous of his conduct.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

NON-RESISTANCE TO IMMORAL GOVERNMENTS.

SIR,—I would not have again troubled you with another letter on the duty of resistance to immoral governments, had it not been that circumstances have occurred which prompt me to write again.

Truth and not victory is my object, and whether I have failed or not in making good my position, the public and not E. must decide.

I do not intend writing again, having as I said before neither time nor inclination to extend the controversy.

E. quotes a number of passages from the Bible in proof of his position. These I intend to notice ere I conclude. Here let me observe that it is totally unfair for E. to put the case as regards obedience to a heathen government on the one hand, and a Government instituted among men enjoying the light of Revelation. Does E. hold that Nations in framing systems of Government are not bound to be guided by the Bible. Civil rulers are said to be the "ministers of God" which implies (if language has any meaning) their obligation as such to acknowledge them. Their ministry consists in the administration of the constitution and laws. But how can they be ministers of God, if He is not in them? The mechanic and artizan, as such, might as well be called the ministers of God, as civil rulers who administer a constitution where God and the Bible receive no acknowledgment.—Obedience is indeed due to civil government, but not to an immoral one. The position on which the claim is founded is incorrect: the conclusion does not follow the premises. The premises are, that conscientious obedience is due to a Government possessed of a certain specific character ("not a terror to good works but to the evil.") But E.'s conclusion is that obedience ought to be given to every government! no matter who her that government possesses the qualifications mentioned in the Bible or not. Is it not inconsistent with the principles of the Divine government that men should be commanded to give conscientious obedience to every government that may obtain a providential existence in the world irrespective of its character.—The effect of this would be to annihilate National morality, and all civil and political liberty.

Hostility to the ordinance of civil government manifested itself in Apostolic times; it found supporters in the early period of the Jewish commonwealth, and it has also been repeatedly revived since the Reformation, and it can be traced back as far as the rebellion of Korah and his associates in the Wilderness.

The New Testament writers frequently refer to this wicked and dangerous sentiment. God's ordinance of civil government was in hazard of being despised, and Christianity of suffering reproach on this account. The Christian is warned not to "despise government or speak evil of dignities." Hence, too, Mr. Editor, the reason why obedience to civil rule is so frequently commanded in Scripture: "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake."—Tit. iii. 1. "Paul does not in this and similar passages (says a late editor of Brown's Commentary on the Bible) refer to those who bear rule as magistrates, but of magistracy itself: that is concerning the function and office itself of those who bear rule over others; nor of one kind of Government but of every kind, nor does he contend with those who think that wicked rulers should be restrained, but with such as despise all government!"

My friend E. by his observations concerning what I said about the beast spoken of by John, evidently considers what I said then as inapplicable to the subject in dispute. Do not all commentators admit (can E. prove they are wrong) that civil governments are introduced under the emblem of a "beast." The 10 horns all crowned are the 10 distinct monarchies into which the Latin Empire had lately been divided, and we are told that its power, and seat, and authority, are all received from Satan, the "old serpent." Will E. assert that such was the ordinance of God, originating, as we are informed, from Hell—receiving its power and authority from the devil—covered with names of blasphemy—supporting antichrist—warring with the saints—yea, with the Son of God himself—and about to be turned into Hell at last! Those whose sentiments agree with mine on this subject are not so unreasonable as to expect that any institution framed and administered by men is absolutely perfect. It is only when errors are of such a serious, radical, pervading kind, as to vitiate the entire institution and to destroy its moral character, and its moral fitness to accomplish the object for which it was appointed (God's glory, and the welfare of men) that we deny it to be God's moral ordinance, and refuse to recognise and honor it as such. Do we not find the apostle describing minutely the character of the Government to which obedience is to be given. This is such as to show that every Government existing in the providence of God is not his ordinance. That which the apostle describes possesses certain characteristics; where these are found, evidence is furnished of the ordinance of God for good to man. The Government of which Paul speaks is 1, "not a terror to good works." 2, He is a terror "to the evil." 3, He gives "praise" and countenance to the good. 4, "He is the minister of God for good." 5, "He beareth not the sword in vain."—6, "He is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath on him that doeth evil." It is on the exemplification of these characteristics that Paul predicates the duty of obedience. Has not God, Mr. Editor, instituted civil government among men, for the purpose of preserving the lives, liberties and property of men. Did the Government of Nero, who reigned in Rome at the time when the Epistle to the Romans was written, secure these? I ask did Nero's government secure the preservation of his subjects' liberty, lives and property. Did it prove itself to be God's moral ordinance by the attainment of at least the primary objects of emancipated rule? I scarcely think that even E. will be bold enough to say so. If it did not, then the Roman Christians could not be required by the Apostle to submit to his authority as the ordinance of God; and if they were not called to submit to Nero as the ordinance of God, what becomes of E.'s favorite sentiment that the Scriptures enjoin obedience to all Governments, for conscience sake, irrespective of character. Again, let me ask of E. does he consider Nero to have been the ordinance of God. That Nero who murdered his own mother, destroyed his own wife, and set the City of Rome on fire that he might create the popular fury against the Christians by laying the blame of this upon them; while, amid the wailing of mothers whose children had perished in the flames, and the groans of the dying, he sang to his lyre on the top of a high tower. In case of E.'s silence he admits that what I contend for shall appear during the Millennium. During that time unmingled peace and prosperity will be enjoyed, and how is that period to be introduced but by the progress, dissemination of what I contend for. Every indeed, the entire overthrow and annihilation of those anti-Christ and wicked and faulty cabinet corrupt system. Truth must be proclaimed and its practical bearing be demonstrated, by the immediate consequences what they may. The blame of any confusion that may arise rests not with those who urge Christ's claims but with those who refuse to comply with them, and with those who countenance them in their refusal.

The sentiment that every Government existing among men is to be obeyed and submitted to, has done much to dishonour and discredit Christianity before the world. Modern times have presented the painful and mortifying spectacle of professed Christians prostituting their sacred profession by the vindication of the absurd doctrines of passive obedience and non-resistance, and striving to fix the seal of Heaven's approbation to the vilest tyranny and oppression. Such views have not only been hurtful to civil society by crushing frequently the hopes of mankind in respect to liberty, but they have injured Religion also. It is not surprising that irreligious yet intelligent men whose minds are deeply impressed with the importance and value of civil liberty should be prejudiced against Religion, when they find professed Christians advocating such a doctrine and exerting all their influence on the side of oppression and wrong.

A few hours later, she lamented to her great sorrow that each glove had contained a bank note of a hundred florins.

☞ The Gazette says that the purchase of Artillery horses in the townships and the Ottawa country for the use of the Imperial Artillery exceeds the sum of $40,000. Supposing that the regulation price $100, was paid in each case, this sum would represent 400 horses.

☞ The Quebec Mercury says:—The name of M. Langevin continues to be bruited among the quid nunes for Speaker, but excites considerable bitterness in strong party circles. He would wash the wound with warm water, extract all the virus possible by sucking its wound with his lips, and then cauterize it deeply with the caustic most readily obtained, but should not permit it if could be procured at once. The time in which the effects of the bite of a mad dog would be seen, varied from two or three days to as many years, but if no effects were felt after two or three months, as a general thing the patient might consider himself safe. Another Federal Victory

CLARKSVILLE TAKEN!!

Augusta, Feb. 18.

Prof. Paul, of Erie, arrived here to-night from Nashville. He says that Fort Donelson fell on Sunday morning, and that Gen. Johnston had telegraphed to the enemy and offered to surrender Nashville on condition that private property would be respected. No answer was received, but the majority of the citizens seemed willing to go up on these conditions.

A large number of persons had left the city. Thirteen thousand Federal troops were stationed at Fort Donelson and two thousand were at Clarksville. The river was rising, for the gunboats of the enemy could reach Nashville. A large amount of Government stores will fall into the hands of the enemy. Most of our rolling stock will probably be saved.

The Savannah Morning News has a special despatch from Charleston saying that the captain of the schooner Theodore, captured on Friday by the Yankees in Bull Bay, has escaped. He says that the Yankees would capture and destroy Savannah this week, and Charleston soon afterwards.

The latest intelligence from Savannah is that the Federal vessels are gaining ground in their efforts to reach the main channel of the river, and that the attack would not much longer be delayed.

A private despatch states that all was quiet yesterday morning at 10 o'clock.

ARRIVAL OF THE "NIAGARA."

ENGLAND DECLINES TO ACKNOWLEDGE THE CONFEDERATE STATES.

Halifax, Feb. 22.

Six sets of parliamentary papers, concerning the civil war in America, had been laid before the British Parliament.

Not less than 45 official communications passed about the Federal gunboat Tuscarora and the rebel steamer Nashville. Among the interesting official correspondence laid before parliament was the declaration of Earl Russell to the Southern commissioners that England could not acknowledge the Confederate States until the war or further negotiations more clearly determined their position.

In January, 1861, Earl Russell instructed Lord Lyons, in case of advice being asked by President Lincoln's cabinet, to reply that Her Majesty's Government will decline unless both parties apply for counsel. The policy of the British Government is:

In February, 1861, in the event of President Lincoln raising a question with Great Britain, is laid down in the following terms: Her Majesty's Government would in the first place be very forbearing; they would show, by their acts, how highly they valued the relations of peace and comity with the United States; but they would take care to let the Government that multiplied provocations and sought quarrels understand that their forbearance springs from conviction of strength, and not from timidity or weakness. Lord Russell reports the substance of the conversation he had with Yancy, Mann, and Mann, the delegates who waited upon him to urge the recognition of the Confederates. His answer to these gentlemen was that England would observe strict neutrality. Earl Russell and Her Majesty cannot acknowledge the independence of nine States until the fortune of arms or a more peaceful mode of negotiation shall more clearly determine the respective position of the two belligerents.

There is a short note written as late as December 20th, which shows that even then the British Ministry believed in the probability of war with the United States. Lord Lyons is directed to speak with Mr. Seward on the subject of letters of marque, and to say that in case of war, Great Britain is willing to abolish privateering as between the two nations, if the President will make a similar engagement on the part of the United States.

The London journals generally regard Queen's speech as a negative, and so far a satisfactory document.

Turin, Feb. 9.

The Italie publishes a circular from the Ministry of the interior, exhorting prefects to prevent, by an exercise of legitimate influence, popular manifestations like those in Parma and other towns.

Liverpool breadstuff market generally has a downward tendency. The various circulars report flour easier at 25s a 31. Wheat quiet with a downward tendency; red Western 10s a 12s; red Southern 12s 2d a 12s 9d; white Western 12s 6d; white Southern 12s 9d a 13s. Corn still with a declining tendency, and declined 2d; mixed 30s 9d a 31s. Provisions market still rules down. Beef still heavy and decline. Bacon quiet. Lard very dull at 60s 9d a 64s. Tallow flat.

The weekly report of the Bank of England shows a decrease of £284,000.

The carriage accident of the Times, speaking of the death of young Wise, says:—"On a low roof in one of the current reports covered with a cotton quilt, by the quilting the form of a young woman, apparently not more than twenty-five years of age. Her countenance indicated great suffering, and as he occasionally turned from side to side he gave vent to groans which indicated the intense suffering caused by his wounds. Her head was bare, but no cap was on the bed by her side. The expression of the countenance of the corpse could fail to recognize him as the son of Henry A. Wise. His haggard face, elongated upon the same cot, in this shocking and place, particularly Academy, must thereby be caused by no one called the image of Jesus Christ, as his lay bleeding and mutilated in the court-room of Charleston. Here died O. Jennings Wise, the most idolized and promising of all the young men of Virginia, in defending the flame of freedom in the Old Dominion."

THE QUEEN'S HEALTH.

The Bishop of Peterborough (tutor to the Queen when Princess Victoria), at a meeting to adopt an address of condolence to the Queen held in that town, said perhaps no one knew more of Her Majesty's private character than himself, and he knew what deep and tender feelings she had. From a letter he had received the previous day, in reply to a letter of condolence he had written and directed to her Majesty's Private Secretary, they might judge how their address was likely to be received, because the Queen was the same both in public and in private as to her feelings. The answer was written by the honorable Augusta Bruce, Lady-in Waiting upon the Queen, and, he had no doubt, expressed her Majesty's own sentiments. "I have received the Queen's commands," says the writer, "to convey her Majesty's warm acknowledgements of the feeling letter of sympathy addressed to her." And the letter proceeds to say that, at this terrible moment, if anything could assuage this overwhelming grief it was the deep share of that grief taken by the whole nation, and the expression of the feelings of those whose prayers were rising continually to Heaven for Her Majesty, and for her fatherless children. They were very soothing and welcome to the Queen's bleeding heart. The continual prayers of the people had already been vouchsafed some answer from Heaven in the resignation and patience granted to the Queen, and in the preservation of her Majesty's health. "Weak and exhausted," said the writer in conclusion, "the Queen is; but no violent reaction from the shock, and nothing to cause anxiety or alarm."

☞ We are informed that between two and three o'clock on Thursday morning a bright red light, having the shape and appearance of a sword, was seen in the western part of the heavens and remained visible for some minutes. It had a very striking appearance, and by many was looked upon as an omen of evil portent. There is more in the heavens, &c.—Montreal Gazette.

☞ The Galt Reformer learns from reliable authority that "the Hon. George Brown intends to leave Canada on a trip to Great Britain and the continent, in the course of three or four weeks. We trust the honorable gentleman will return to the Province with renewed health and spirits—ready and powerful as ever to fight the battles of the people of Upper Canada in Parliament and through the Press."

A FIRST CLASS FAMILY NEWSPAPER

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF SCOTSMEN IN AMERICA, AND TO THE DISSEMINATION OF SCOTTISH LITERATURE AND NEWS.

FIFTH YEAR.

ON January 2nd, 1862, was commenced a new volume (V.) of the Scottish American Journal; and in future the numbers issued before the first and last days of each year will constitute a complete volume, of convenient size for binding; and each number will contain a most entertaining and instructive repertory of reading matter, calculated to interest all readers of British origin. The Scottish American Journal, though decidedly national in its constant efforts to promote peace and prosperity between the people of Great Britain and America, is yet emphatically Scottish in its principles; records all events occurring in Scotland that can be regarded of the least interest to natives of that country residing in America; and in this "news from home" is united, weekly, a summary of general intelligence from England, Ireland, and other parts of the world.

A distinguishing feature of the Scottish American Journal is its regular re-publication—verbatim et literatim—of the "leading articles" of the most eminent British newspapers and other periodicals upon the most important topics of the day. This feature is a unique one, and has been found very acceptable to the people of British North America, as it supplies a long needed desideratum in the Provinces. In reference to the "editorials" of the Scottish American Journal, it is a significant fact that the British press frequently acknowledges their intrinsic truth and force by copiously extracting from our columns and declaring that the British Americ'an Journal is the most able and interesting paper published in America. A concise weekly summary is also given of the principal items of American news, and a similar narrative of events transpiring in the various British Provinces, the latter feature supplying a deficiency which was felt in general at the Provinces of late in common to what was transpiring in other parts of the British possessions.

In the forthcoming volume of the Scottish American Journal increased space will be devoted to the literary department in the publication of serial tales and sketches, vividly illustrating the customs, habits, sentiments and general characteristics of the people of Scotland; each tale emanating from the pen of an author of celebrity. As heretofore, particular care will be exercised in the choice of original poetry, composed by writers of acknowledged genius and poetry of thought, recollect here or abroad. The first number of the new volume contained the commencement of a deeply interesting tale, entitled

THE LIEUTENANT & HIS SON.

This tale will prove to be one of the most interesting ever published, and will be appreciated by all classes of readers.

...ORNAMENTAL TREES.—By this term it is intended to designate those trees which have been grown with a view to their ultimately attaining the fullest size and development of which the variety is capable. They should be planted also with this in view, and not be so placed or so neglected as to become stunted and consequently unhealthy.

DWARF TREES.—These trees must have been originally (by budding or grafting) on the Quince stock, and preserved in a state of dwarfishness by annually following the course of pruning properly followed by those in the country all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its virtues and marvelous effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it thoroughly, and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon it being a genuine remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, in curing the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the torturing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a place in the list of remedies for these complaints. Orders promptly executed. Medicine forwarded to all parts of the country for further supplies, and each testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

The Canadian Pain Destroyer never fails to give immediate relief. All Medicine dealers keep it. Physicians order and use it; and no family will be without it after once using it.—Price only 25 cents per bottle. All orders should be addressed to Northrop & Lyman, New Haven, N. Y.

Sold in Peterboro by Ormond & Gilmour, A. W. Keogh, Wm. Cowley; in Millbrook by Dr. Turner; in Lindsay by C. Bristow; and by all Dealers in Medicines. 50

THE FOUND OF WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

RHEUMATISM & NEURALGIA

...has long been the object of earnest and patient research, this has been triumphantly discovered. It is called

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING!

Watson's Neuralgia King reaches the source of the trouble, and banishes the disease from the system. Unlike the mild poisons of Liniments and Embrocations which merely stimulate the surface, are but temporary in their effects, and are, at best, of doubtful virtue, it WORKS AT THE SEAT OF THE AILMENT, ARRESTS IT, KILLS IT, ERADICATES IT, and leaves no trace behind.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

also cures GOUT AND DYSPEPSIA, in all their forms. It is now giving relief to thousands who have been suffering from these diseases, and who have tried all other remedies in vain.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

has received the highest testimonials from the highest sources in regard to its wonderful efficacy. It operates with equal success in mild and chronic cases, never failing to work out a speedy and permanent cure.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

costs but one dollar per bottle, and less than a bottle often effects the end desired.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

is the only Specific and cure for Rheumatism and Neuralgia that has ever been discovered.

these Wafers are particularly valuable; they will in a few days restore the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will assist, direct, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional Vocalists.

200,000 Feet

OF THE NEW PATENT ENGLISH ELECTRO-GALVANIZED, ANNEALED AND CARBONIZED

LIGHTNING RODS

JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH

SPRATTS RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!

AND ENLARGED

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with special reference to its great conducting power, is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and gradually serves as its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod Professor Croft has a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated, by an approaching thunder cloud, surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, diminishing and lessening the fountain, ending the cloud of its concurrent accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fail in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Common Iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

TORONTO, Sept. 15, 1860.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE SUPERintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

PETERBORO', July 29th, 1861.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods so highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

J. BROWNE, M. D.

I entirely concur in Dr. Browne's observations,—Also have bought two of the same Rods for my two cottages on Brock Street.

Poetry.

HOPES OF LIFE.

A shadow moving by one's side,
That would a substance seem;
That is, yet is not, though descried,
Like skies beneath the stream.
A tree that's ever in its bloom,
Whose fruit is never ripe;
A wish for joys that never come,
Such are the hopes of life.

THE END OF LIFE.

To live by faith on Christ alone,
To trust in Jesus' love;
To look to God for strength to live
For high or joys above.
To live for Him who bought our souls
With such a precious price,
To glorify His name above,
Such is the end of life.

THE WELL OF ST. KEYNE.

A well there is in the west country,
And a clearer one never was seen;
There is not a wife in the west country
But has heard of the well of St. Keyne.

An oak and an elm-tree stand beside,
And behind doth an ash-tree grow,
And a willow from the bank above
Droops to the water below.

A traveler came to the well of St. Keyne;
Joyfully he drew nigh,
For from cock-crow he had been travelling
And there was not a cloud in the sky.

He drank of the water so cool and so clear,
For thirsty and hot was he;
And he sat down upon the bank,
Under the willow-tree.

There came a man from the house hard by,
At the well to fill his pail,
On the well-side he rested it,
And he bade the stranger hail.

"Now art thou a bachelor, stranger?"
"For an if thou hast a wife, [quoth he,
The happiest draught thou hast drunk
That ever thou hast in thy life.

"Or hath thy good woman, if thou hast,
Ever here in Cornwall been?
For an if she have, I'll venture my life,
She has drunk of the well of St. Keyne."

"I have left a good woman who never was
The stranger made reply; [here,"
"But that my fortune should be better for
I pray you, answer me why." [that,

"St. Keyne," quoth the Cornishman, "many

And before the angel summoned her,
She laid on the water a spell.

"If the husband of this gifted well
Should drink before his wife,
A happy man henceforth is he,
For he shall be master for life.

"But if the wife should drink of it first—
God help the husband then!"
The stranger stooped to the well of St.
And drank of the water again. [Keyne

THE HORRORS OF A BATTLE FIELD.

The correspondent of the New York Tribune sends the following sketch of scenes on the battle near Fort Donelson. He says:—

Many of the enemy upon the battle field after we had obtained possession of a part of the intrenchments on Saturday afternoon were horribly wounded, mostly by our Minie rifles and Enfield muskets, and usually in the face or on the head. Poor fellows lay upon the ground, with their eyes and noses carried away, their brains oozing from their crania, their mouths shot into horrible disfiguration, making a hideous spectacle th t must haunt those who saw it for many future days, and rise in horror through many distempered dreams. I saw an old gray-haired man, mortally wounded, endeavouring to stop with a strip of his coat the life tide flowing from the bosom of his son, a youth of twenty years. The boy told us father that it was useless; that he could not live; and while the devoted father was still striving feebly to save him who was perhaps his first-born, a shudder passed through the frame of the would-be preserver; his head fell upon the bosom of his youth, and his gray hairs were bathed in death with the expiring blood of his misguided son. I saw the twain half an hour after, and youth and age were locked, lifeless, in one another's arms.

A dark-haired young man, of apparently twenty-two or three, I found leaning against a tree, his breast pierced by a bayonet.—He said he lived in Alabama; that he had joined the rebels in opposition to his parents' wishes; that his mother, when she had found he would go into the army, had given him her blessings, a bible, and a lock of her hair. The bible lay half-opened upon the ground, and the hair, a dark lock tinged with gray, that had been between the leaves, was in his hand. Tears were in his eyes as he thought of his anxious mother, praying, perhaps, amid her prayers, for the long-expected footstep of her son, who would never more return. In the lock of hair religion was revealed to the dying young man; and I saw him kiss the tress again and again to his lips, as his eyes looked dimly across the misty sea that bounds the shores of life and death; as if he saw his mother reaching out to him with the arms that nursed him in his infancy, to die, alas! fighting against his country and her opposed whose memory lived latest in his departing soul.

A Secession soldier, a member of the 10th Alabama Regiment, I believe was lying just inside the intrenchments. His glazing eyes gave assurance that life was embraced in minutes. He held a rosary and crucifix in his hand, and his moving lips were doubtless uttering a prayer. He had evidently endeavoured to kneel, but was too weak. One of our soldiers saw and hurried to him, to assist him in his attitude of prayer; and while engaged in this kind office, a shot from the rebel cannon struck and killed them both.

In two instances I noticed wounded foes lying near each other, who were offering water to one another from their canteens; and so humane and gentle were our Boys to the wounded and dying enemy, that one would have supposed that they were the nearest and closest friends. One fierce rebel, a Mississippian, refused all aid, tho' badly wounded, and had endeavoured to shoot a member of one of the Indiana regiments who had approached to render him assistance, which so enraged the good-hearted soldier that he fitted his musket to blow out his enemy's brains. A moment's reflection made him magnanimous, and he left the Mississippian to care for himself. I might relate a dozen instances of daring, suffering, and heroism on both sides, as my note-book is full of them; but they were very little different from what occur on all battle fields, and prove how mysteriously what we call Good and Evil are commingled in Humanity, and that even through the dark clouds of war the sun of Justice and Mercy streams; and that in the most repulsive landscape fair flowers are breathing out their sweetness ever, though all unseen.

THE CONSCRIPT.

In the wars of the great Napoleon, thousands of French soldiers were raised by conscription—that is, taken by lot from the working classes.

These conscripts, though they generally made good soldiers, often went with great unwillingness and even a groan from their humble homes and their loved ones, to endure the hardships of weary campaigns, to risk life and limb in desperate battles, for they scarcely knew what, with people against whom they had no ill-will.

On a cloudy morning in early May, a company of conscripts were marched away from a pleasant little hamlet in the south of France. For some distance on their way they were followed by loving friends, some weeping, and some bravely striving to cheer them up.

At last these fell off, and the conscripts pursued their march in melancholy silence. On the brow of a hill, the road passed the gates of an old chateau, the seat of the ancient lords of the manor, the Counts De Lorme. The present Count, an old man, had lately been permitted to return from exile in England, to his half-ruined estate; but, in acknowledgment for this act of clemency, he had felt obliged to offer to the service of the Emperor his only son, who was now a captain in the grand army.

Just outside the gates, on this morning, stood Count de Lorme, evidently awaiting the conscripts. He addressed a few words to the sergeant, who brought his men to a halt, and called forward one Jean Moreau, a tall, sturdy young man, with a frank, honest face, now sadly overcast.

"Well, Jean," said the old nobleman, kindly shaking the conscript's hand, "you must go, it seems this time. I am sorry we could not buy you off again; but you are built of too tempting soldier-stuff to remain a peaceful village blacksmith."

"Yes, Monsieur le Comte," said the sergeant, "it isn't often we find such stalwart fellows now-a-days. The villagers all speak well of him, and seem to begrudge him even to the Emperor."

"Yes," replied the Count, "Jean is a good boy. I know him well; he was the foster-brother of my son. Here, Jean, is a letter to the captain. You may meet him somewhere. You may possibly serve in the same regiment. If so, I commend him to you. He is not so strong as you are, but he is brave to rashness. Watch over him, I pray you."

"Ah, Monsieur le Comte, believe me, I would gladly give my life for dear Captain Henri."

"I do believe you, Jean. Adieu!"

"Adieu!"

Jean Moreau, the handsome young blacksmith, left in his native hamlet a widowed mother—a good, sensible woman, formerly nurse at the chateau, but who, since the Revolution, had adopted the calling of a blanchisseuse, or laundress. "Mother Moreau," as everybody called her, had another son than Jean, fortunately too young to be drafted as a conscript. Years before, this good woman had taken home a poor little orphan girl, who had grown up to be as a daughter to her, and more than a sister to Jean. Marie Lenoir, the pretty young blanchisseuse, was in truth his betrothed wife. The little bouquet of Mayrose-bush and forget-me-nots in his button hole, was her parting gift. As on the hill by the church tower, he turned for his last look at the dear little hamlet, nestled in the pleasant valley, he was not ashamed to press those flowers to his lips—not ashamed of the tears that fell on them. He was too manly to fear being thought unmanly.

Months went by; months of sad anxiety to Mother Moreau and Marie Lenoir, for they had heard very unfrequently from Jean, and knew that he was always in danger.—He did not take kindly to a soldier's life, but he tried faithfully to do his duty so he could not be altogether unhappy. After he had once seen the great Emperor, he felt the enthusiasm which that wonderful man always inspired, and longed to do something grand to merit his praise. Thus, by a strange and happy chance, he found himself in the same regiment with his beloved foster brother, Captain De Lorme.

At length, there rang over France the news of the great battle of Austerlitz, where the Emperor commanded in person, and defeated his foes with fearful slaughter. After a time of painful suspense, the Count De Lorme had word that his son had been badly wounded, and got out at once for the hospital in which the young officer had been left. Not many weeks went by, and as things, good or evil, came to the knowledge of the conscript. Mother Moreau, who was a brave woman, inured to trouble, kept up a hopeful heart; but Marie Lenoir rapidly lost the roses from her cheeks, and the spring from her step, while the laughing light of her soft, brown eyes, gave place to a look of sadness and fear.

But, where was Jean? Not dead, as his friends feared. Not buried forever out of their loving sight, in the soldier's crowded and bloody grave. He was lying at the same hospital which had received his foster brother, very ill from several severe wounds, and when at last he rose from his bed, and staggered out into the court, one sleeve of his military coat hung limp and empty at his side. If Jean Moreau had not given his life for Capt. Henri he had laid down in his service, what was almost as dear—his good right arm. This was the true story of it: In a part of the field where the battle raged most fiercely, Captain De Lorme's company, in which Jean was then enrolled, was engaged. At one time they were right under the eye of the Emperor, and fought with redoubled ardour and courage.

The enemy were in great force here, and desperate charges were made on both sides. Seeing the standard-bearer of his regiment fall, and the banner in the hands of the enemy, Captain De Lorme dashed forward to recover it. This he did, and was gallantly fighting his way back to the French ranks, when he fell, pierced in the breast by a ball, and bleeding from more than one bayonet thrust. In an instant there stood over him the tall, powerful form of the young blacksmith. Flinging down his musket, and seizing the sword which the wounded officer had dropped, he kept off all assailants, or cut them down with terrible strokes of that keen and bloody weapon, flashing it about him, here, there, on every side, like red lightning. Lifting the fainting young noble, together with the standard, and bearing them on his left arm, Jean actually fought his way out of the enemy's ranks, step by step, defending both his precious charges. He received several wounds but none that disabled him, till a musket ball went crashing through the bones of his right arm, and it dropped helpless at his side. When at last he fell and closed his brave eyes in a long, deep swoon, which he believed the sleep of death, he was at the foot of a little eminence, on which Napoleon sat on his war-horse surveying the terrible scene of carnage—the surging sea of battle that raged around him. Jean wondered if the smoke of the cannon veiled from his calm eyes the agony of dying men, and if their groans came to his ears between the volleys of musketry, in the pauses of stormy battle music.

As soon as Jean was able to leave his ward, he was permitted to visit his captain, who, however, was still very low from a fever induced by his wounds. For the most time, he was unconscious or delirious and recognized no one. The old Count was with him, but evidently knew not who had saved the life that flickered faintly in the breast of his son, and Jean was not the man to inform him.

About a fortnight later, near the close of a weary day, two discharged and maimed soldiers approached the secluded hamlet of De Lorme. The elder was crippled by a shot in the knee—the younger had lost an arm—his right arm. He was pale and thin from illness, and on one cheek was a bright seam, from a deep sabre cut. So Jean, the handsome young conscript, came home.

He had borne his misfortune very cheerfully at first, but now at every step he grew gloomy and lost courage. To his comrade, Jaques Faral, he frankly confided his trouble.

It was a fear that maimed and disfigured as he was, his Marie would no longer be willing to accept him for her husband. This fear grew so strong on him, that when they came in sight of the dear old cottage, he paused in an olive grove, and sent his friend forward to prepare his betrothed and his mother for the sad change they must see in him.

Jaques found Marie leaning over the gate, looking down the street. She was always looking out for her returned soldier now. She seemed disappointed that Jaques was not Jean—but greeted him kindly, and soon drew from him all he had to tell of her doubting lover. Calling Mother Moreau and Jean's young brother, she ran before them down the street, and soon cheered the sinking heart under the olive trees with a glad embrace and a welcome home. Then came the young brother, laughing loud to keep from crying, and affecting not to see that dangling sleeve, or to miss the grasp of the lost right hand. Then the mother—thanking God, as she fell on the breast of her son, putting the hair from his scarred forehead and blessing him. Pretty Marie had shrunk a little from that ugly red mark on his cheek, but the mother kissed that very spot most tenderly, with murmurs of pitying love.

The next day, Jean generously offered to free Marie from her engagement, but she would not be freed—reproaching him with tears for thinking so poorly of her as to suppose she would forsake him when he needed her most.

"But Marie," he said, "we shall be so poor. My pension will be small, and I can do little with only a left arm."

"But Jean, I am young and strong, and—"

"God and the saints will help us," interposed Mother Moreau.

Jean and Marie responded by silently crossing themselves, and the marriage day was fixed for the first Sunday of the next month.

On the evening before the wedding, the Count De Lorme, who had lately returned to the Chateau, sent word to Mother Moreau, that with the permission of the wedding party, he would be present at the church, to give away the bride.

With that punctuality, which in a part of true politeness, he came at the exact time appointed; and leaning on his arm, there came a slight pale young officer, Captain Henri, now Colonel De Lorme. With respectful eagerness Jean stepped forward to greet him, but in his joy and faithful devotion, would have kissed the hand held forth, but that De Lorme, with a sudden impulse of affection, extended his arms, and the brothers in heart embraced. This is a custom in France, with men—but only when they are equal in rank. At this moment the young noble caught sight of that mournful empty sleeve. A look of pain crossed his face; he gently lifted the sleeve and pressed it to his lips.

"Jean," he said at last, in a soft, unsteady voice, "I bring you good news!—The Emperor himself witnessed your gallant conduct in rescuing me and our colors, and if you had not been disabled, you would have been promoted; as it is, you will receive the pension of a Lieutenant. And Jean, I give you joy, mon frere, he sends you this—the highest reward of a brave soldier of France, the best wedding present for a hero."

With these words, the young Colonel placed on the breast of the poor conscript a shining ornament—the grand cross of the Legion of Honor!

So the wedding of Jean and Marie was a merry one, after all. The good old Count not only gave away the bride but gave with her a nice little dot, or portion. All the villagers who were rich enough gave them presents, and the poor gave them blessings, which doubtless turned into good things in time.

Marie Moreau proved such an energetic, devoted wife, that Jean felt that he had got more than his right arm back again; yet he was no idler, for he found that with practice, he could do many things with his left arm, and at length adopted the business of a vine-grower.

As he grew older, his beard grew heavier so that in a few years little Henri his son, had to part, with his chubby fingers, the thick crisp hair to get at the sabre-scar, when he wanted to hear the story of the hard fight for the young captain, and the banner, and of the great Emperor on the hill, overlooking everything with his keen, gray, unflinching eyes."

HOW AND WHERE HARE, THE MURDERER, DIED.

The Canadian correspondent of the Scotsman gives the following narrative of Wm. Hare, who was associated with Burke in the series of cold-blooded murders perpetrated in the West Port of Edinburgh, in the year 1828. About twelve or fourteen years ago, one of the most popular and best men in Upper Canada (from whose lips I have the following story) was travelling in the stage in the Township of Ekfrid, in the County of Middlesex, C. W. In the vehicle with him were two persons in the neighborhood. On entering into conversation with the one that was sitting next to him, he discovered that he was the doctor of the district, and that he had graduated at Edinburg. Being himself a native of that city the conversation naturally turned on Edinburg affairs, and the doctor having informed him that he had studied under Doctor Knox whose name acquired an unenviable reputation in connection with Burke and Hare, the circumstances connected with the trial of these criminals were recalled and talked over. The doctor then said he presumed he was not aware that Hare was buried in the township, and as my informant expressed considerable surprise and interest, he proceeded to relate the circumstances connected with his death.

Several years before a man named Hare arrived with his wife in the district, and settled on a clearing removed a considerable distance from any of his neighbors.—Here he lived inoffensive for some years, and it was observed that, as the settlement increased, he removed further into the forest. Among the settlers who arrived from the old country, there was a Scotchman who brought with him a pamphlet containing an account of the trial of Burke. In this pamphlet there was a portrait of Hare, and also a minute description of his appearance and height. It was handed about from one farmer to another, and in the long cold nights of the Canadian winter its contents were perused with much interest not unmixed with horror. By and bye some one fancied he had seen a striking resemblance to the portrait in their neighbor Hare. Another thought the description corresponded exactly with his appearance, and others believing that his shy and retiring life must be the consequence of some great crimes, began to view him with suspicion. These suspicions became changed into a confirmed belief that their solitary neighbor was none other than the notorious Hare, and it was not long till he became to be shunned by the settlers who regarded him with ill-conceived awe and aversion. The cause of the odium with which he was regarded was soon communicated to Hare, who on learning it, went to the owner of the pamphlet, and asked permission to read it. Before he finished it, however, he was seized with violent paroxysms of mental agony, and fearful convulsions. He sent for a priest, but before he arrived he expired in dreadful torment. As Hare had pretended to be a Protestant, the neighbors considered the circumstance of his sending for a priest to be a confirmation of their suspicions. On his death some of them went to the house and having compared the mark and measured the body with the description given in the account of the trial, they found that they corresponded with it in every particular.

AN AMUSING INCIDENT.

In a Western Conference one circuit sent in a petition for a minister, but said nothing about any characteristics as a preacher as a disciplinarian. One quality, however, he must have: "Be sure and send us a good swimmer," said the petitioners. Of course every one was puzzled, and none more so than the Bishop. On enquiry it turned out that the circuit was situated in a region of wide and bridgeless streams, where the itinerant, in keeping his appointments, would have to rely upon his own aquatic locomotion; in fact one minister had been drowned on the circuit, because of his deficiency in this respect.

THE ROYAL CHILDREN,

As the father of a family of nine children happily all surviving, the anxieties of the Prince Consort must needs have been very great; but he gave the same conscientious performance of his parental duties as he had given to every other obligation he had incurred since his marriage. The tenor solicitude with which he directed their education keeps his beneficial influence in the character of the Princess Royal, the Prince of Wales, the Princess Alice, Prince Alfred, and such of the interesting group as are passing from youth into adolescence. The Princess of Prussia has left her English home to be a grace and an ornament to a home equally worthy of her dignity and worth. The Prince of Wales is approaching his majority, but, thanks to his admirable training, has exhibited none of the characteristics of heirs apparent. We can trace no resemblance between him and his predecessor in that title; there is also, we are equally proud to say, nothing in common between him and the first two Princes of Wales of the Brunswick dynasty. His education, as far as it has proceeded, has given his Royal Highness an air of true English sincerity, and a sense of true British honor, that render him far more worthy of our love than the meretricious graces and superficial accomplishments of that "finest gentleman in Europe" against whom has been recorded so many ungentlemanly proceedings.

The Princess Alice bids fair to rival her eldest sister in those sterling qualities that deserve to be prized above all artificial distinctions. Her Royal Highness is about to find another home. The arrangements for her nuptials with the Prince of Hesse must, however, now be set aside. Her heavy affliction will leave her in no condition to seek the felicity of a bride. Although a precedent might be found for carrying out her marriage in the union of the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of James I., with the Count Palatine of the Rhine, which took place a very short time after the death of her brother, Prince Henry, we feel certain that the Prince of Hesse will have to wait till her great sorrow has in some degree abated. As for the Sailor Prince, it is impossible to imagine anything more perfect than the manner in which his Royal Highness has adapted himself to the position in which he has been placed. The same genial frankness, the same unassuming modesty and the same quiet reserve, have been impressed upon his character. There must surely be something singularly wise and good in a system of education that can be so successfully carried out, as it has been with the members of this remarkable family. Comparing the results with those which arose from the instruction given to the children of George III. and Queen Charlotte, we cannot but come to the conclusion that the happy effects we behold in the family of our beloved Queen and her lamented Consort, are in a great measure due to his Royal Highness's personal influence and example.—English Paper.

A DOWN-EAST JURYMAN.

["Ethan Spike" contributes to The Portland Transcript a sketch of his experience as a juryman. The first cases he was called to try were capital ones—the criminals being a German and a "nigger" respectively.]

"Her you formed any opinion for or agin the prisoners?" sed the judge.

"Not particular agin the Jarmin," says I, "but I hate niggers as a general principle, and shall go for hanging this here white wooded cuss, whether he killed Mr. Cooper or not," sez I.

"Do you know the natur of an oath?" the clerk axed me.

"I orter," sez I, "I've used enough of 'em. I begun to swear when I was only about—"

"That'll do," sez the clerk. "You kin go hum," sez he, "you won't be wanted in this ere case," sez he.

"What!" sez I, "ain't I to try this nigger at all?"

"No," sez the clerk.

"But I'm a jewryman," sez I, "and you can't hang the nigger unless I've sot on him," sez I.

"Pass on," sez the clerk, speaking rather cross.

"But," sez I, "you, mister, you don't mean as you say; I'm a regular jewryman, you know. Drawed sout of the box by the selec man," sez I. "I've allers had a hankering to hang a nigger, and know when a merciful dispensatory seems to have provided one for me, you say I shan't sit on him! Ar this your free institutions? Is this the nineteenth century? And is this our boasted—"

Here somebody hollered, "Silence in Court."

"The Court be ——!" I didn't finish the remark 'fore a couple of constables had hold of me, and in the twinkling of a bedpost I was hustled down stairs into the street.

Naow, Mr. Editor, let me ask, what are we comin' to, when jewrymen—legal, lawful jewrymen, kin be tossed about in this way? Talk about Canoars, Mormons, Spiritualism, free love, and panicks—where are they in comparison? Here's a principle upset. As an individual, perhaps I'm of no great account; I'aint fur me to say; but when as an enlightened jewryman I was took and carried down stairs by profane hands, just for assertin' my right to sit on a nigger—why it seems to me the pillers of society were shook; that in my sacred person the whole state itself was, figgeratively speakin', kicked down stairs! If that's law in the land I'll have this case brought under a writ of habeas corpus or ackey Dickut.

TRADING A WIFE.

The Van Buren County (Mich.) Tribune says that a recent "trade" took place in Deerfield, as follows: Mr. Lovelace, of the township of Deerfield, sold his wife to a Mr. Dodge for a four-year old cow.—Mr. Dodge is living with said bonghten wife, and Mr. Lovelace keeps the cow.—Either cows are very high or wives are mighty cheap.

A JOURNEYMAN CARPENTER'S EXPERIENCE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

He went up last spring, got a claim which turned out a trump, and he sold it for $5,000 paid down. He then worked another claim with three others, and he took out of this latter, after paying expenses in the mines, upwards of $10,000 for his share. His partners earned the same. The claim yielded in gross a little over $50,000. He left then with him in New Westminister $20,000 of his own. His partners had each $10,000, my friend's fortune being augmented $5,000 by the sale of his first claim. The time the four of them took to earn this amount was six weeks. "But we did not work all that time either", he said; "perhaps a month would cover it." I advised him on the disposal of his gold. On my return to Victoria I met him coming to me for advice upon another claim for $12,000 of an Oregon man, and he wanted a draught in which to remit payment, and so on. In consequence of the scarcity of coin and the heavy depreciation on gold bars he went down by the last steamer to San Francisco to have his gold coined at the American mint there. He is a sharp fellow. He "capitulated" that he would save $600 by the trip, for he would go down in the second cabin at a low fare, as would save freight on his gold by carrying it about him on going on board. Once the vessel started the purser would take care of it for him, and at San Francisco he would get full value for his gold. He was not at all spoiled by his sudden good fortune. He did not seem elevated even. Had he retained his claim longer before selling it, he would have got $14,000 for it. It was a "big strike;" but with thorough philosophy, he did not regret having parted with it. His name is Greer, a Welshman; he has sent for his wife and family, and as Vancouver Island pleases him, he intends to buy land and settle in this colony, after next season's campaign in Cariboo, where he expects to make $80,000. He corroborated pretty much all I have narrated in this letter. He worked on William's Creek; he enjoyed good health, and had grown so fat and florid that I did not recognize him when he first addressed me. He laughed at the current stories of the severity of the winter. Had he had time to knock up a house he would have remained in Cariboo all winter and worked his claim in spells of good weather."—The correspondence from British Columbia.

WINE MORE DEADLY THAN CANNON.

Wendell Phillips, in his late address at the Music Hall, said:—

"I know a soldier in the army of the Potomac who was picked up in the streets of Philadelphia one year ago a complete wreck, a confirmed inebriate, but who was by the love of a sister and the charity of a Boston home placed once more on his feet. He was at Ball's Bluff, and three times with unloaded musket charged upon the enemy. He was one of the six who heroically defended and brought away the body of the fallen leader of that bloody fight.—The captain of the company to which he belonged died in his arms, receiving the last words of consolation from his lips. He was afterwards conspicuous in the conflict until the orders were given for each one to seek his own safety. Removing some of his apparel he plunged into the inhospitable river, and after great exertion landed on the opposite bank, seven miles below the encampment. Nearly exhausted, chilled, half-clad, half-starved, he finally reached the camp. The captain of the next company to which he belonged kindly said to him, pouring out a glass of wine, "Let me give you this; you will perish without it." "I thank you sir," said the soldier, "but I would sooner face all the cannon of the enemy than taste that glass of wine."—Boston Transcript.

THE TAILOR AND THE BROKEN MORTAR.

"Answer a fool according to his folly."—Prov. xxvi. 5.

An Athenian, passing through the streets of Jerusalem, found a broken mortar. As he now thought to show his wit, he went into the shop of a tailor and addressed him thus: "Master, be so good and put a patch on this mortar for me."

"That I will do," replied the tailor

MR. SMITH O'BRIEN.

FROM LOYALTY.

Mr. Smith O'Brien has political as well as private affairs, from which it appears that, in 1848, before the outbreak of the Irish rebellion, he executed two deeds, assigning the whole of his property to his eldest brother, Lord Inchiquin, and Mr. W. Greig, a personal friend—to be held by them in trust for the use of his wife and children:—

"Mrs. O'Brien died in June last, and immediately afterwards Mr. S. O'Brien called upon the trustees 'to re-convey to him the estates granted by the deeds of 1848, to which demand they declined to accede, as they were apprehensive that they could not legally or with propriety comply therewith, but the said W. S. O'Brien insists that it is against equity and good conscience that he should be held bound by the said deeds.' He has threatened proceedings in Chancery to compel the trustees to execute a reconveyance; and at other times it has been stated by the said William Smith O'Brien that he intended to defeat the said deeds by effecting a sale of the lands comprised in them to a purchaser for value.' Under these circumstances the trustees have filed a petition in the Irish Court of Chancery, praying to be relieved from further responsibility in relation to the deeds, and that the trusts may be administered under the direction of the court."

Colonel Eugene O'Reilly, one of Smith O'Brien's companions in arms in 1848, now an officer in the Turkish service, has written a letter to him, in which he says:—

"I tell you plainly, then, that you should not have written that letter to Mr. Seward, in the first instance, because you owe your life, your liberty, and the possession of independent means to the clemency of that government against which you now wish to excite people; and, secondly, because, with the experience you have had of the nature of the stuff of which the revolutionary element in Ireland is made, you should have avoided writing anything which might have the effect of inducing even one young man to turn away from his profession or his trade, and give his time to political conspiracy, which, you must know well, will, in Ireland, never produce a movement even worthy of being called rebellion.—Therefore, in publishing the letter to Mr. Seward, you committed a crime, because you uselessly induced young men, of a certain class, to expose themselves to dangers, and become involved in difficulties which will affect them all their lives. I cannot see what good you expected to do by publishing that letter. If the difficulties which are about to come upon England are so great that she may have apprehension for the continuance of her dominion in Ireland, then that letter was quite unnecessary to call people's attention to them. But if the coming difficulties are not of that magnitude your letter shall only have contributed to turn some young men from tradesmen into conspirators, to ruin them, and to inflict an injury on Ireland, by disturbing its tranquility, and lowering the character of the nation in the eyes of the world."

He thus indignantly repels the insult to the Irish soldiers in the British army conveyed in the assertion that they would desert to the American standard:—

"I will not here enter into a discussion of the many dangers you foresee for England if she goes to war, but there is one thing about your right to speak of which I protest against. Why do you assert that one half of the army which may be sent to Canada will desert? Because that half would be Irish, of course! How can you, an Irish gentleman, rejoice in the prospect of soldiers, your countrymen, deserting their flag? How dare you assert that our countrymen are perjurers, ready to break the oath which they took when they entered the ranks? What gives you right to speak thus of the Irish soldier, and to endeavour to cast a stain upon our military honor, and remove the prestige of the only merit which the nation still possesses in the eyes of Europe? And, moreover, you are ignorant of the subject you are treating. Now, I am not so. I have served in the ranks of the British army, and I can tell you how soldiers feel. While they serve, their corps is their country, is their family; and its honor, its fortune, its weal, and its woe are their own; they have proved this on a hundred fields of battle, and will yet prove it again and again, please God."

Another of the rebels of 1848, who fled to Australia, and settled near Melbourne where he has grown rich under an assumed name, David Buchanan, is now in this country, and has given the result of his observations in a letter to the Daily Express, from which we extract the following:—

"For my part, a residence of near 14 years in a colony where the motto is 'work or starve,' and during which I have given the preference to honest, well-rewarded toil, has cured me of any wish to march again under any chieftain, Irish or French, or any desire and for this ample reason—I can see no Irish wrongs to right that cannot be more effectually done in a quiet way, than by raising either the barricades or the green flag, or that cannot be redressed in a peaceable constitutional manner far better than fraternising with Napoleon III. and his Zouaves, or invoking the aid of New York rowdies, with Meagher of the Sword at their head."

'To right our wrongs in battle line;'

SAD END OF A PROMISING CAREER.

(From the Lagersall Chronicle.)

Poor, unfortunate Ira P. Schofield is no more! He died on Monday evening last at half-past nine—a victim of strong drink. All our old residents are conversant with the history of this unfortunate man. It is the old story of genius, education, jovial companions, the social glass, misfortune, drunkenness and death. Deceased settled in this town many years ago. Possessed of an excellent education and much business talent, Mr. Schofield started in life with a bright future of prosperity before him.—His strict integrity, manly bearing and gentlemanly deportment, won for him the respect and esteem of the citizens. He amassed property, was surrounded by everything calculated to make home happy, and an interesting family budding into existence about him. But, alas, he social companions who surrounded him led him to bad habits; his business was neglected, property disappeared, and of late years he has travelled in the downward path of the many bright minds who have preceded him, but while regretting his misfortune we keep before our minds his many ennobling qualities, and shun the rock upon which he was shipwrecked. The particulars of his death are as follows:—

On Monday evening he was sitting on a chair in Douglass' Hotel bar-room, apparently as well as usual; Mr. Douglass had occasion to go to the barn, and on returning a few minutes after he discovered deceased lying on the floor near the bar-room door. Mr. D. asked him if he could not get up. He replied "no." Assistance was procured and he was carried into the hotel and Dr. Carroll sent for; but he had departed and death had left his impress upon his pale features. Mr. Schofield was widely known and well connected. He was a brother of Captain Geo. Schofield of the steamer Magnificent, and Wm. Schofield, Esq., a prominent Whitby merchant.

WILL THE PRESENT WAR IN THE UNITED STATES END IN THE EMANCIPATION OF THE SLAVES?

We have watched with much interest and even anxiety the progress of this treasonable conflict in the United States. At times it seemed clearly to portend or promise emancipation. Hundreds of thousands of Northern men enlisted in the army, with the firm conviction underlying their act, that Slavery would be stricken down in the conflict. And we firmly believe that most of those to whom we refer would not have enlisted at all, and hazarded their lives, merely to preserve an undivided territory for the United States. The cry of public men and journalists has been, "Let us put down rebellion first—we cannot put down slavery until we first put down this unnatural rebellion." And, so far as this goes, there is both sense and truth in it. But the enquiry has often arisen in our minds, do all who use this cry, this pretense, really mean to touch slavery after the rebellion shall have been quelled? Will not a large number say, Well, we do not need to meddle with this "peculiar institution." Now the country is all quiet and slavery has received such a lesson, it will never lift its head so high again. We think there are indications of this feeling even now, when the tide of victory has just fairly turned in favor of the North. The Presidents has released (with a few exceptions) all political prisoners, "on their subscribing a parole engaging them not to render aid or comfort to enemies in hostility to the United States" and to all parties so released an amnesty for past offences is granted. On this the New York Examiner remarks:—"We know not what could exceed the significance, the clemency, and the wisdom of this order.—A like amnesty will probably be offered to all the misguided rebels who lay down their arms, and return to their allegiance to the Government? We can think of only about a dozen ambitious and unprincipled leaders, in this murderous secession swindle, whom the country will insist on having shot or hung."

We know not how much the Editor of the Examiner may intend here; but whatever this paragraph, when viewed in connection with indications to be found in other American papers, and with the do-nothing policy of Congress on the subject of slavery, may mean—we feel sure that the hour of real danger for the Northern States is rapidly approaching. The real danger is, the healing over of the terrible cancer of slavery slightly. The many thousands who have jeoparded their lives on the high places of the field—the parents, the sisters, and wives who have given up sons, brothers, and husbands in this hour of their country's trial, in the strong hope that the land would not only be delivered from traitors, but from the foul stain of slavery, will not be satisfied unless some decisive measures are adopted by the national government to get rid of this root of all evil. They will say we fought and bled for the "Stars and Stripes," but we meant that they should float over free men—not over slaves. We did not stake our lives to restore all things as they were, but, in order that things might never be restored to the same state as they were at the breaking out of the rebellion. Perhaps the national government at Washington may yet take some bold stand on this most perplexing question, but we confess we have fears. This granting of "amnesties" to all "misguided rebels" sounds rather ominous. All the rebels, with a few exceptions, have been misguided, their persons and property should therefore be sacred.—We shall soon see whether the Americans have virtue enough to do right to the oppressed, as well as bravery enough to fight for their country. May the Lord direct them in this great trial, on which their present and future welfare so largely depend!—Canadian Baptist.

THE RETURN TO LAW AND LIBERTY.

From the N. Y. Tribune.

We never gave, and expect never to give, a heartier welcome to any document than to the General Order by which the Secretary of War, in behalf of the President, announces that the reign of lawless despotism is ended, and that no person is henceforth to be incarcerated or retained in a military Bastile without other warrant than the mere order of a Minister of State. The President could do nothing else so well calculated to commend him to the confidence and esteem of the great body of the American People as he has done in authorizing the issue of this order.

It was proper to call attention to the perilous condition of the country at the time the extreme measure of practically suspending the habeas corpus was resorted to. No loyal and reasonable man doubts that necessity, nor hesitates to approve the assumption and exercise of dictatorial power in such a crisis as that of the sudden isolation of the Metropolis by conspiracy, riot, and murder in Baltimore, by the burning of railroad bridges and destruction of telegraph wires with the full assent of the traitorous authorities of the Monumental City and the acquiescence if not active co-operation of the Governor of Maryland. Had the President, in that dark and perilous hour, seen fit to shoot without judge or jury, a dozen of the traitor emissaries and spies who infested Washington, and to send five hundred more to prison, the heart of the Nation would have promptly responded, well done! even though some disloyal Judges of high degree had been included in the swoop.—There is no complaint, save among the Breckinridges, Vallandighams, &c., whose censure is praise, that the President assumed too much power in the agony of this struggle for the National life, nor that he wielded his extraordinary powers too vigorously while the crisis continued and within the scope of the actual danger.

But there is peril in every assumption of extraordinary power—peril of perversion, of undue extension and of unreasonable prolongation. The love of power is so strong a passion that it is difficult to make the actual wielder perceive and respect the demarkation which separates vigor from tyranny.

—We learn that Mr. Marsh, a young man not long since a resident of this city, and a son of Mr. D. O. Marsh, well known to our citizens, was killed recently at the battle of Fort Donelson. Deceased was a tanner by trade, and served an apprenticeship with Mr. Hyman. He belonged to an Illinois regiment, and he was orderly sergeant of that corps.—London Prototype.

PARTIES IN THE NEW HOUSE.

As the time draws nigh for the assembling of Parliament, the press is discussing the probabilities of the fusion or distribution of parties, and the consequences likely to follow. The Opposition proper despairing of effecting by themselves the Herculean task attempted these past 4 years—seem to discern an ally in the Conservative element, now infused by the late elections, and predict that with their assistance they may succeed in driving from power the men who have so long misruled us. It is somewhat ominous of the fate of the present Government that a respectable party who though in the main are on the ministerial side of politics, and opposed to the "Grits," have come out decidedly adverse to the Government, for their long and continued unconstitutional acts. This party seem to think that there is too little of the Conservative element in the Administration, and are anxious to infuse more. These and sundry other matters that might be mentioned may be taken as a message to the present incumbents in office to set their house in order. We do not care just now to guess, divine, or prophecy, as to the changes likely to take place at this time—we shall only express our firm conviction that changes will take place, and they may go so far as to upset entirely the present Ministry. Many would rejoice at such a result, and we should certainly be glad to think that retribution had at last overtaken them; but we are free to confess that unless we have a Ministry formed to carry out the principles of the Reform party we do not think we should with the change be any better off. If it be admitted, as the Globe asserts, that the Opposition obtained a majority in the Upper Province, it is of little avail, as they are in a minority in the Lower. As the double majority principle is ignored, the Ministry will have a majority of the whole sufficient to work; and we shall probably have the mortification to have our present corrupt rulers, or a set not much better, for another period. It may be that another 4 years' misrule like the past will suffice to rouse the people to a sense of their true position, and lead them to hurl from power men who have systematically trampled on their rights, and cramped thier prosperity by heavy taxes. The country, with prosperous times, has been saddled with debt when it ought to have paid its way. The tariff, in all conscience, is high enough; but with such profuse and extravagant expenditure it is inadequate to meet the demands, and the deficit is allowed to swell the national debt—already too large for so young a country. We observe one error the Globe has fallen into in classing the members; it has put Mr. Dunsford, the member for Victoria, among the Opposition. Although Mr. Dunsford was largely supported by the Opposition, it must be borne in mind that the contest was between a non-resident and a resident—a circumstance, in a county like Victoria, calculated to operate largely in favour of the latter. Again, Mr. D. is well known as a public man, having been for a number of years in the County Council, and having an irreproachable reputation, gave him a decided advantage over Mr. Cameron. But Mr. D. always appeared, both during the contest and after, as an independent member; and in the letter which he wrote declining the invitation to the Cobourg Reform dinner, he grounds his non-acceptance of the proffered honour on the fact of his canvassing and being returned as an independent member. Besides, we who are acquainted with Mr. Dunsford know very well on a vote of confidence or non-confidence in the present Ministry, he would vote for retaining them in power. Born, cradled and reared a Conservative, it is natural for him to support the party his predilections favor. If we mistake not, the Globe has before classed Mr. Dunsford among the independent members. We should certainly put him down with the Ministerialists. There may be others that should be on the other side; a short time and we shall know who is who.

We shall watch earnestly the movements on the political chess-board, and keep our readers posted up. We wait and hope, but as we have before intimated, until a change takes place amongst the people, we are not sanguine of a change for the better with our legislators. Such people—such rulers; and in reflecting upon the latter we impeach the former. Until a new system of political ethics pervade the body politic, we despair of improvement in the morals of our legislators. In personal and in municipal matters, the people soon apply the remedy, when dishonesty or incapacity are discovered in their servants. Why not extend the same rule of conduct towards the more important servants, deputed to make the laws to govern the entire country?

We have faith that there is moral sense enough in the people to rectify our existing errors, and trust that the Opposition in the coming session will exhibit a line of conduct that will impress the country with a conviction that they act for the good of the people, and that while they read homilies to their opponents on political honesty they may practice what they teach. We feel proud in being able to record that our good county has set an example worthy to be imitated elsewhere. It has in returning our present worthy member taken a step in the right direction, and has done its part in inaugurating the new order of things so much desired. Although our gallant Colonel goes to Parliament wanting parliamentary experience he goes there with common sense, intelligence, and political honesty and consistency, ready to assist in every good measure and equally ready to oppose every unjust and wicked one.

It is often unanswerably asked by our political opponents, as it has long before, "what will your member do? what can he do for us?" alluding to the folly, as they call it, of not sending a man to support the government. We reply that a solitary member, if he cannot carry or oppose measures, may nevertheless do a good deal. He can by a consistent course of conduct extend his influence and assist to remove the corruption around him. We send our representative to Parliament not expecting that he is to carry what we desire or upset what we detest, but we send him to vote and act for the good of the country, that he may be a reflex of the desire of the county of Peterborough, to reform the abuses so loudly complained of by a majority of the people of Western Canada. We have confidence in him that he will do all we expect, and that he will neither offer a factious opposition to the party in power nor an obsequeious endorsement of their questionable doings. His hands will be strengthened at finding, as he assuredly will do if he does not know it already, that the hearty good wishes not only of his supporters but many of those who heretofore opposed him are with him and exercise confidence in his integrity to do his duty to his constituency and the country.

THE CONGER PROTEST.

It is now certain that Mr. Conger, aided by his friends Sidney Smith & Co., is pursuing the petition of protest against the election of Col. Haultain, and we are told that Mr. C. has written here from Quebec that he will succeed. No doubt if Ministerial influence can do it, it will be done, but we see little reason to fear as the case will come regularly before an election committee of the House, and be tried in its turn with the 30 other cases to come before the House. As the principal point in most of the petitions of protest is the using of the wrong rolls, the decision in one case will rule nearly the whole.

But in any event we have nothing to dread. The Reformers of this County were never in better temper than at the present time.

A meeting of the friends of Col. Haultain on Saturday last proved this. A number of persons from different parts of the County were invited to attend, and it was the intention to hold a strictly private meeting. Contrary to expectation the attendance was very large, the Hall was well filled, and the greatest harmony and enthusiasm prevailed. There were those present who had come 10, 15, and 20 miles, through the heavy snow drifts, to attend the meeting.

It was unanimously agreed to defend the action of protest, and if necessary to go through another battle for their worthy representative.

No sane man can doubt that the result of an appeal to the electors would prove an overwhelming victory for Col. Haultain.

"LAW-BREAKING MADE EASY."

The above is the caption of an article in the last Review, wherein the editor expresses a vast amount of indignation at the Town Council for passing a License By-law. What the object of the writer can be in attacking a body of men in so wanton a manner, it is not easy to see—unless it be to gratify a spirit of fault-finding, for which the Review has been notorious since its establishment in this Town. The "soft-sawder" of its noticing only "sins of commission" shows it an unfaithful guardian of the people's rights; and the very article alluded to dwells most upon the omission of the Council in not appointing a License Inspector. When an individual gets reckless of his own reputation he unfortunately becomes reckless of that of others. The editor of the Review ought to have made himself better acquainted with the facts of the case, before making such sweeping charges, which are as false as they are foul. The facts in connection with the whole matter are the following: Some time ago a member of the Town Council gave notice at a regular meeting thereof, that he would at the next meeting introduce a By-law to amend and repeal the License By-law.—The amendments were marked on the margin of a printed By-law, and consisted of substituting the words "Town Council," "proper authorities," and "such party or parties as the Council may appoint," in lieu of the "Inspector of Licenses;" also, of inserting the words "not less than fifty cents nor more than" before "fifty dollars" as the fine in the original By-law for selling without a license. The prices of licenses were lowered, and the clause appointing a License Inspector and defining his duties were repealed. On the second reading of the By-law the only alteration made was making the prices of licenses the same as last year, with the exception of victualling houses, which are raised to $10. The only additional amendment made was repealing the 2nd clause of the By-law passed last summer amending the License By-law, which was pronounced by Judge Boucher as illegal. Whatever might have fallen from a member of the Council on the night the last By-law was read a first time, the Council did not interfere; and in its subsequent passage through the Council, neither the gentleman who introduced the By-law nor any other member of the Council let fall a remark meriting the severe recrimination of the Review. And as to the charge of the Council treating with contempt a numerously signed and respectful petition, it is utterly false, and shows how ready the man who made it, is at fault-finding, despite his homily thereon. The petition was received in the Council as respectfully as other petitions are received. If, as has been observed, the introducer of the By-law let fall some remarks at the first reading which may have been construed to mean what has been stated, is it not a gratuitous slander to charge 11 men who never by vote or speech sanctioned such remarks. Is it becoming in a public journal to state as facts positive untruths, and vilify the character of public men? The public acts of public men are fair subjects of criticism, but it is too much of a good thing to surmise what some of these may think in introducing a measure, and then denounce wholesale the entire body of the Council upon these surmises. An apology is due and should be demanded. No good cause requires vituperation or false statements to bolster it up, and often suffers more from the indiscretion of its quasi friends than from open and avowed enemies.

FROM ROANOKE ISLAND.

We are indebted to Mr. Arnott for the following extract which we take from a letter received by him from his son, who is in the Federal army, and who is at present it appears with the Burnside expedition.—The statements agree well with those published in the American papers.

Peterboro has at least one brave fellow in the Northern army:—

Ship Curlew, off Roanoke Island,
North Carolina, Feb. 11, 1862.

DEAR FATHER,—I take this opportunity of letting you know I am not dead yet, and I hope you are still enjoying good health. We left Hatteras on the 3rd and got here on the 7th. Sent in a flag of truce, but got answer they were ready for us. So at it went the gun boats and the forts, and banged away all day; about 5 p. m. we landed. Our brigade (Gen. Park's Third) were the last regiment; we had to lay out all night

The morning of the 8th broke, and the 1st brigade advanced. Then the firing commenced; we were under arms all the time, cannon and musketry. The 2nd Brigade then advanced, but no sign of any advantage on either side. General Burnside then gave Col. Hawkins the command to advance as our forces were getting the worst of it, as our men had attempted to charge but were beaten back, and unless we took the batteries the day was lost to us. So away we went on the double quick, and the word halt never was given until we were about 100 yards from the Fort. We had passed through a swamp and we were up to our knees in water. A shower of grape and canister passed over our heads, then we charged on the Fort and in 5 minutes more it was ours. We followed them up and got Gov. Wise's son, who is now dead.

The other brigades followed up and took them all prisoners, about 2,500 men. We also took one fort 12 guns, two forts 8 guns, 3 four guns, and the one we charged 3 guns. We lay ashore until 11th came, then on board again where we now are.—We didn't get a man killed in our regiment but our total loss is about 30 killed and 120 wounded. The loss on the other side must be very near the same. They always bury theirs, so we cannot find out how many they lose. We are going right into North Carolina. We expect some tough work. I will keep you duly posted as to our course. We got a high old name which I hope we will keep. Burnside said to our General he could say the Zouaves won Roanoke. All who saw us go in yelling like so many tigers said we fought more like devils than men. However, self praise is no compliment. Direct John Arnott, 9th regt. The Council adjourned till Monday next, at 7½ o'clock, p. m.

☞ In our article last week on the Millbrook Branch, we inadvertently stated the sum due us by John Fowler at £2,700. It should have been double that amount, viz., £5,400,—a very nice sum these hard times.

☞ Mr. Beaudry has been elected Mayor of Montreal, over Mr. Rodier, by a large majority. His defeat was thought by Mr. Rodier's friends to be a thing impossible.

CURLIANA.

The return match between Keene and Peterboro, was played on the ice near the Keene bridge, on Saturday, resulting in favour of the Keene players, 16 points best. The game lasted four hours, and the Otonabee men showed themselves to be adepts at curling.

We are glad to know that an effort will be made to organize a club in Town. A shed might be built on any of our streams at small expense, and a clean rink would always be open.

THE WAR.

There seems to be no doubt of the evacuation of Columbus and we presume that we shall speedily hear of a grand movement down the Mississippi under General Halleck. Tennessee seems to be entirely in the hands of the Federalists. The rebels may make a stand at Memphis, but not east of it. This is a great success for the North, and indicates extreme weakness on the part of the South.

Communications.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

"I SHALL ADVOCATE AND SUSTAIN MEASURES TO SUPPRESS INTEMPERANCE."

DEAR SIR,—The Hon. Sidney Smith, in his printed address to the electors of Trent Division, used the above words.

They have been forcibly brought to my recollection while looking over the Examiner, where I find that steps have been taken to bring the cause of Temperance more fully before the people of your Town.

In looking over the list of names I find that Mr. Smith does not form one of the number. Ought he not to take a prominent part in this noble and philanthropic work, to save the perishing thousands who are on their way to drunkard's graves.—Had he the cause at heart he would use his talents and high position, and like a brave General, stand at the head of the Cold-water army in Peterboro.

I have often thought of the speeches I made (while canvassing the Division,) in reference to Mr. Smith's temperance principles as enunciated in his address, and as carried out by him at his meetings. And to judge from the many notices for Temperance meetings, it is quite evident that he with his friends did not drink up all the whiskey.

Profession is not principle. It is one thing to be a Temperance man and carry out the principles he advocates, while it is another thing to use the name merely to carry out a selfish desire for political or any other purposes.

It has always been a source of regret to me to find during political and other excitement that men will sacrifice their temperance principles, and that in the face of their pledges to "taste not, handle not, and in all suitable ways to discountenance the use of alcoholic drinks in the community." We often find these men throwing their pledges to the winds, and so far forget themselves as not only to countenance the use of alcohol, but even to be partially or wholly overcome by its effects, during excitement.—It ought not to be so.

I can easily account for the poor man who has been an habitual drunkard but who has tried to reform, being overcome under strong temptations. I have seen many cases of that kind, when the person has been led by the consummate meanness of others into the path of error, and I have seen such mean men glory in the downfall of their victims. But to see men who have never been drunkards allowing themselves to outstrip the bounds of their Temperance pledge on any occasion is a source of regret.

I believe that but for the weakness or willfulness of the advocates of total abstinence the evils arising from the drinking usages would be far less than they are at the present time. Every man who breaks his pledge brings the cause into contempt with the drinking community; the injury inflicted is great, a great moral principle is violated, and if the man himself does not feel, there are thousands who do, and his fall and want of principle is deplored.

If we look upon alcohol as a powerful enemy in our noble country; if we see it making rapid strides to overthrow the very foundations of all that is good and great amongst us, (for no one is safe who uses it, whether to be the humble laborer or the judge upon the Bench). How are we to counteract its effects but by the friends of Temperance standing firm on all occasions. Can any man advocate the cause of total abstinence who is not himself sound at heart on the question? I think not; hence the folly of expecting persons to carry out our views who by their every-day life show they are opposed to them.

I am pleased to find that the good cause is not neglected in your Town: that it is not left wholly to Legislative enactments, but that its true friends are using moral suasion in carrying forward the good work. May they go on and prosper is the sincere wish of one who can never forget the kind treatment he received from the people of the County and Town of Peterboro.

Yours, &c., &c.,
BILLA FLINT.

CIVIL GOVERNMENTS ONCE MORE.

SIR,—I have no doubt but that both yourself and your readers are getting tired of this long controversy. And as my friend C. S. D. has given his finale, I now give mine also.

In the midst of so much talk, or rather writing, about obedience to Civil governments, some may lose sight of, or may not know, the points in dispute between my friend and myself. I shall briefly allude to them, in order that our respective positions may be understood.

C. S. D. opened the controversy by stating that the fact of a government existing does not constitute it an ordinance of God, nor that its executive officers are the ministers of God,—that obedience to a government was only obligatory to a moral one, one of a certain specific character,—and that the subjection enjoined in the New Testament is only to be understood when a government possesses certain moral qualifications. I met these statements by asserting that the existence of a civil government was an ordinance of God, that its officers were the ministers of God, demanding our obedience in all civil matters only—irrespective of its character. I supported my position by proofs from the Word of God—relying altogether upon its teachings, as the safe and only guide of our duty both toward God and man.

I am glad my friend has come out once more, as he gives the most unmistakeable evidence of having felt the potent influence of the sword of the Spirit. While he shows that he will not be convinced against his will, and exemplifies the old saying that there are none so blind as those who will not see, he nevertheless, unconsciously it may be, has very materially modified his views in his last letter, and admits some points which he before questioned. Let him go a little further, lay aside his preconceived opinions, and his favorite authors, and adopt the word of God as his sole guide, and we shall then be on; in our views of Civil government.

He charges me with unfairness, where I cannot see that I am deserving of it. He says that my conclusions are that obedience is enjoined to a Government, irrespective of its character. This is correct; I do hold that a heathen or a Christian civil government, by the authority of the sacred writers, is to be obeyed in all civil matters. He says "Civil rulers are said to be the 'ministers of God,' which implies their obligations as such to acknowledge them (how?). Their ministry consists in the administration of the constitution and laws. But how can they be the ministers of God if He is not in them." I reply that God says to Pharaoh "for this cause have I raised thee up that I might show in thee my power,"—and of Cyrus "Thus saith the Lord to his Anointed, to Cyrus whose right hand I have holden to subdue Nations before him.—I have called thee by name though thou hast not known me." Also of Nebuchadnezzar, "My servant Nebuchadnezzar the King my servant.—Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, Behold I will send and take Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon, my servant and will set his throne upon these stones." Daniel was exalted to station, and promoter this same King, and had his three companions appointed rulers over the affairs of the Province of Babylon.—Daniel takes the proud monarch of Babylon the to everywhere taught in God's Word that "He removeth kings and setteth up princes."—See Exodus 9.16, Is. 45.1, Jer. 25.9, 27.6, 43.10. Daniel 2.21, &c.

I trust that these new proofs from Scripture will convince my friend that God calls wicked, cruel, and tyrannical kings "his ministers", and also teach him that the Apostle urging obedience to the government of Nero is consistent in calling civil rulers "God's ministers".

Daniel and his friends found no difficulty in obeying Nebuchadnezzar in civil matters. But when he ordered them to fall down to the image he had set up they refused. Daniel was cast into a lion's den and his comrades into a fiery furnace for their refusal. God is to be obeyed first, then man.

There are many errors and false principles in the communications of C. S. D. which could be easily refuted, but this would be going over ground already travelled. I regret to have to allude to his observations in reference to obedience to satan. The same authority that enjoins obedience to the civil ruler enjoins opposition to satan. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you. Whom resist, steadfast in the faith,—the shield of faith whereby ye may be able to resist the fiery darts of the wicked. We wrestle not against flesh and blood but against principalities and powers, and against spiritual wickedness in high places."

If C. S. D. will be guided by the Word of God he will find all the difficulties he conjures up vanish into thin air. Ten thousand quotations from learned authors may be disposed of by one stroke of the sword of the Spirit. Let him act as his confession of faith teaches him that the Word of God is the sole guide of our duty to God and man.

Yours truly,
E.

News of the Week.

—It is said that the Hon. George Brown has declined the nomination of the Reform party in North York and South Simcoe, and expressed his intention to remain out of Parliament for the present.

—A party of young gentlemen, many of them Kingstonians, left this city to-day for the distant gold mines of British Columbia. Their route lay via Cape Vincent to New York and thence by sea to British Columbia. They take with them the best wishes of their friends and acquaintances, and may luck attend them whither they are going.—Whig.

—A short time ago, a young woman at Queenstown, with the idea of amusing or frightening the child of a sailor, about 18 months old, entrusted to her to nurse, put on a mask and a red petticoat over her head, the appearance of which so frightened the child, as to bring upon it convulsions from the effects of which it died.

—The Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Times says:—I feel that I violate no confidence in stating, as I now do, that the highest military authorities of our Government believe the Confederate rebellion to be hopelessly overthrown. General McClellan is expecting to hear, any hour that the rebel army is in full retreat from Manassas, and when it breaks away from Manassas, it is doubtful if even Richmond will be a point in the next line of defence. The most probable policy of the rebel leaders will be to retreat as expeditiously as possible from all points to the Gulf States, and try to make a stand there hoping by compact masses to resist our armies, until the fervid heats of summer shall come to their aid, and help to thin our ranks and demoralise our soldiers.

—The Commander-in-Chief, we understand has issued an order warning the soldiers in Canada, that the desertion in the present aspect of affairs will be regarded as it would be were England really at war with the United States.

—In Upper Canada, in 1852, the native population was found to be 58.08 per cent, and from the census taken last year it would appear, that they had increased to 64.67 per cent, or almost two-thirds of the whole population. In Upper and Lower Canada together, the native population is 76.60 per cent or more than three-fourths of the whole.

—The Witness, of Montreal, says there is a good deal of counterfeit coin in circulation. Three or four bogus English shillings have recently been offered in one store by respectable individuals.

—We have now been three days without mails from Montreal and Quebec. Surely the management of the Grand Trunk must be very inefficient, if it has not been able to clear the track from snow in that time.—Montreal Transcript, 25th.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

EVACUATION OF COLUMBUS!!

OCCUPATION OF HARPER'S FERRY AND BOLIVAR HEIGHTS.

BOLIVAR, MD., Feb. 28.

The army of General Banks occupied Harper's Ferry unopposed, on Wednesday with all the accessories for a permanent occupation. The advance took possession of Bolivar Heights yesterday and pushed a reconnoissance to Charleston, capturing a few prisoners. Loudon Heights are also occupied to prevent any flank movement by the enemy. To-day Charleston was occupied by a strong force and will be held against any attack.

The plans of the commanders are not known, but the movement is probably to cover the reconstruction of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad bridges—and may mean more.

A train of cars passing the Berlin station was fired at to-day by a rebel battery, but no harm was done.

Washington, March 1

All is quiet across the Potomac, opposite Washington. No news of public interest from that section of the army has been received here to-day.

Washington, March 1.

There is nothing in the official telegraphs last received to show that the rebels are evacuating Columbus, nor has any information been received from General Buell since the announcement of the taking of Nashville, when he was four miles in front of that city. Hence the newspaper reports of the rebels being surrounded at Murfreesboro are not reliable.

ABANDONMENT OF MURFREESBOROUGH BY THE CONFEDERATES!

MARTINSBURG OCCUPIED BY UNION FORCES.

WASHINGTON, March 3.

General Buell telegraphs to General McClellan last night, that the rebels have abandoned Murfreesboro, and are in full retreat towards the Tennessee river. Crossing this river will place them in Alabama, and free Middle Tennessee of every armed rebel force. Inasmuch as the enemy retreat along a railroad line, tearing up the rails as they pass, it will be difficult for General Buell to catch them. "I am permitted to announce the highly important intelligence that the Tennessee and Cumberland rivers will be opened this week to free and unrestrained commerce under the order of the Secretary of the Treasury."

This measure will be one of great relief to the commerce of the Western States, and it will be a boon to the loyal people of Tennessee, who have been suffering so terribly for tea, coffee, and other necessaries of life.

Washington, March 3.

The Secretary of the Navy received a letter to-day, dated Cairo, Feb. 27, from flag-officer Foote, who says,—I have the honor to forward a communication from Lieutenant-Commanding Bryant, the substance of which I have just telegraphed.—The Captain of the schooner which brings the despatch says that 6 miles below Nashville there was a battery which mounted 15 guns, but several of them were thrown into the river before the Cairo arrived.

He also reports that a strong union feeling was manifested in and near Nashville, and that Governor Harris after vainly attempting to rally the citizens and others, left on Saturday morning for Memphis.

He also states that the gunboats were welcomed by the people at Nashville and at other points on the Cumberland river, and that hearing of my arrival, supposing the gunboats would proceed immediately to Nashville, the enemy retreated panic-stricken.

The unusually high state of the water, enabling the boats to ascend the river is providential.

Charleston, Va., March 2.

The main body of Gen. Bank's division rests in the vicinity of Charleston. No disaster or accident has occurred since the concentration at and departure from Sandy Hook, to cause any anxiety to the friends at home.

Hundreds of contrabands are hourly seeking refuge within our lines, but they are allowed to roam at large without espionage or care, in fact, but little notice is taken of them except to prevent their return beyond our posts.

The general reports from Winchester are conflicting, and but little reliance can be placed upon them, coming as they do from refugees and contrabands. The military commanders are undoubtedly better informed than the public, and are consequently pr

ARRIVAL OF THE "HIBERNIAN."

Portland, Feb. 27.

The steamship Hibernian, Capt. Grange, from Liverpool on the 13th instant, and Derry on the 14th, arrived here at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Reuter's special telegram of the 13th instant says:—Important events are approaching in Germany, Saxony having proposed a reconstruction of Germany, more strictly as a confederacy.

Prussia replied, that she considered the German Confederation as international, and not a federal part.

Prussia hinted also, that the reform of the federal constitution might be carried out in such a way, that besides the German Union, comprising Austria, a closer federal union might be formed between Prussia and such minor German States as might join her, thereby establishing a kind of political diverem. Although this was no formal proposal, but a mere suggestion, Austria, Bavaria, Hanover, Saxony, and a majority of other states, Baden and Cobourg excepted, remitted a collective note to Prussia, protesting against her views, and announcing their intention to hold a conference for the reorganization of Germany in accordance with the views of Saxony, and inviting Prussia to join in the conference. Prussia declined, and this was expected to lead to a dissolution of the Federal Diet.

The debates on the German question expected in the Prussian Chambers may bring about a crisis in Germany.

Madrid, Feb. 13.

The Sumpter is still at Gibraltar, although the British authorities had given her notice to quit. Several of her crew were landed and will not re-embark.

The following is the Liverpool summary of the proceedings in the British Parliament on American affairs:

In the House of Lords on the 10th, Earl Carnarvon said he had received information that no less than three British subjects were confined in the prisons of the Federal Government, and had lain there for some months, being denied trial or release unless they took the oath of allegiance to the United States. He hoped that the Government would take earnest steps in the case and at once declare what was the position of British subjects in the Federal States.

Earl Russell said that Lord Carnarvon could hardly have read the papers which had been laid on the table, for if he had he would have seen that those cases had been brought under the notice of the Government. Neither had he made allowance for the peculiar state of affairs in the United States, which justified urgent measures.—In Great Britain Parliament had given Government, in times of difficulty, authority to arrest persons on suspicion, and it had been frequently done without their having been brought to trial, Government had complained of the arbitrary manner in which these arrests were made by the sole authority of the President, without legislative sanction, and he was not disposed to defend the acts of the American Government. Congress had decided that the prerogative belonged to the President, and if he believed that parties were engaged in treasonable conspiracies as alleged, he did not see how Her Majesty's government could interfere with a practice which was absolutely necessary, although it was exercised unnecessarily and harshly. The American government alleged they had undoubted proof of the complicity of these persons in conspiracies, and Her Majesty's government was not in a position to contradict, but they had entered strong remonstrances against the manner in which arrests were made and prisoners treated, and the case of the persons would be earnestly watched by them.

The Earl of Derby was ready to make every allowance for the difficulties of the Government of the Federal States; but these cases naturally excited indignation, after the arbitrary manner in which British subjects had been invariably treated, and the very uncourteous replies of the Federal Government to the remonstrances of Earl Russell, who had quietly accepted the views of Mr. Seward, in this case, which he was not disposed to do at first. He would therefore ask the noble Earl if in any English precedents of this kind it was made a condition on being brought to trial for the party to forswear allegiance to his own country. If the right of arrest on suspicion was admitted their subsequent treatment was unprecedented.

Earl Russell had no knowledge of the details of these cases, having had no notice of the question. He was not aware that the oaths of allegiance to the Federal Government had been tendered to persons, except one who had declared his intention of becoming a subject of the United States.

Earl Russell, in reply to Earl Donoughmore, said he believed the Federal Government had not tendered the oath of allegiance to British subjects, knowing them to be such.

Earl Malmesbury, in asking for papers connected with the Blockade, complained that the Times had deliberately represented that Earl Derby advocated its being forcibly raised. He approved of the conduct of the Government. The question was one for them alone to decide; but it was desirable to know what the real state of the blockade was. He expressed doubts of the policy of the Declarations of Paris 1856, and did not believe they would or could be carried out in great wars, when circumstances would be too strong for abstract principles.

Earl Russell said that on the first night he was glad to find that the Earl opposite had approved of the conduct of the Government; and that the country must feel confidence when all the leading men were agreed. Papers were being printed. They would be in their Lordships' hands before long, and he hoped they would reserve their opinions till then, considering the importance of the question.

In the House of Commons on the 10th inst., Mr. Cobden gave notice, that upon an early day he intended to bring under the consideration of the House the present state of the international and maritime laws, as they affect the rights of belligerents.

The proceedings in both houses on the 11th were unimportant.

An order was received at Portsmouth to reduce the number of men and guns of the ships of war in commission.

The Daily News reviews the engagement of Mill Spring, Ky., as genuine and important to federal success, and thinks, it may reasonably hope that the federal troops engaged may be taken as representative specimens of the Union army, as it has become under General McClellan. The results of a rapid and decisive action cannot be doubted.

The diplomatic correspondence concerning the intervention in Mexico was laid before parliament.

Earl Russell, in a late letter to Sir C. Wyke, touching the flower that Arch-Duke Maximilian would be called to the throne of Mexico says:—"If the Mexican people by a spontaneous movement place the Austrian Archduke on the throne, there is nothing in convention to prevent it. On the other hand, we cannot in ourselves be a party [illegible]

FRANCE.

A Paris letter says:—Mr. Slidell has been received by M. Thouvenel in a private capacity, his diplomatic assumption of character being distinctly ignored.

A bill for the conversion of the 4½ per cent rentes having been passed by the Chamber of Deputies, by a vote of 226 to 19, the Senate, on the 11th, unanimously declared that it did not oppose the promised leave of the law for such conversion.

The Bourse de la rentes was dull, at 71f 25c.

It was announced in London, on the 11th inst., that negotiations with certain capitalists of that city for a loan of four millions sterling to the French Government or its agents had been suddenly broken off. The cause is not stated, except in an intimation to subscribers that the securities which were to be hypothecated are not to be obtained.

The discount bank at St Etienne had stopped payment. Capital to the amount of 9,600,000 francs had been lost.

SPAIN.

M. Mon had accepted the Presidency of Congress, vacant by the death of Martinez de la Rosa.

It is said France had consented to fix the amount of the Spanish debt of 1823 at twenty million francs, and that the decree for settlement had received the Royal signature.

ITALY.

A great popular demonstration had taken place at Genoa on the 9th in favor of Victor Emmanuel, and Rome as the capital of Italy.

At Milan on the same day preparations had been made for a demonstration, but the municipality issued a notice advising the Milanese to exercise their constitutional rights by signing the following document: 'Although respecting the Sovereign Pontiff as the head of the Church, we look upon Rome as the capital of Italy, with one King, Victor Emmanuel." This document soon received an immense number of signatures.

Baron Ricasoli had issued a circular on the Roman question, in which he observes that the Government still pursues the execution of the national wishes, and has formally stated by what means and ways it intends to proceed to Rome. The Ministry alone will decide on these means, and the opportunity of applying them. The Government denies that its labors may not be impeded by inconsiderate acts of enthusiasm and clamorous manifestations. Prefects should enlighten public opinion and make use of their authority in order to prevent these popular manifestations taking place.

Popular demonstrations have taken place in several other Italian towns.

The cotton manufacturers of Genoa, who employ upwards of 25,000 hands, held a meeting to consider some means of ameliorating the effects of the present crisis in the cotton trade. A committee was appointed to report on the matter.

INDIA, CHINA, AND AUSTRALIA.

Additional telegrams of these mails had been received.

Calcutta, Jan. 15.

Transports and other vessels sailing round the Cape of Good Hope are being armed.

Melbourne, Dec. 26.

The amount of gold shipped since last mail has been 173,245 ounces. Trade was steady.

The January mails from the West Coast of Africa had reached England.

Increased activity in the slave trade was reported.

The withdrawal of the American squadron led immediately to a large increase in the number of vessels carrying the American flag.

The barque Manuel Orthese, from New York, but sailing under British colors, was seized in the roads off Cape Coast, on suspicion that she was a slaver.

ARRIVAL OF THE "ETNA."

The 'Great Eastern' coming to New York, in April.

The Etna was detained at Liverpool till the morning of the 13th, and sailed simultaneously with the Hibernian.

It was intended to dispatch the Great Eastern for New York in April.

On the 12th instant the House of Lords were not in session, and the proceedings in the House of Commons on the same day were merely of a formal nature.

The London Times of the 13th publishes further correspondence from Dr. Russell, from New York. In it the writer says that the army of the Potomac is not likely to move till winter is over, and that a mutinous spirit prevailed among the men, many of whom are better off than ever they were; and that the various expeditions by sea had so far accomplished nothing of moment.—The affair in Kentucky he regards as the greatest success yet achieved by the federalists.

The Treasury returns for the year ended 31st December last, show an excess of expenditure over receipts of £2,314,207 sterling.

FRANCE.

Paris, Feb. 13.

The Moniteur publishes the law on the optional conversion of the 4½ per cents.—The decree fixes the difference to be paid at 5 francs 40 centimes, for 4½ per cents, and at 4 francs 20 centimes, for 4 per cents.

The bourse on the 12th closed firmer; rentes were 75f 35c.

Another note on the affairs of the Valley of Danpes has been addressed by the Swiss government to M. Thouvenel. It maintains the position taken by Switzerland and regrets that France has not arrived at a similar conviction.

AUSTRIA.

Letters from Vienna are filled with the most lamentable accounts of an inundation. The district submerged, in Vienna alone comprises a population of 80,000 persons to be provided for. Rain fell four days almost without interruption. Bridges and viaducts were destroyed, and railroad service was nearly all suspended. Several towns were also inundated by the Danube, including Presburg and Pesth. Other continental rivers, particularly those in Holland have also greatly risen and were causing much alarm.

The Prince of Wales had arrived at Vienna and was visited by the Emperor and the Archduke.

Liverpool, Feb. 13.

Flour comparatively quiet; western canal, 29s to 30s; Philadelphia and Baltimore, 30s to 31s. Wheat less inquired for; white and mixed 12s 4d to 13s 6d; red 11s to 12s 9d. Corn 6d per qr. cheaper; white, per 480 lbs, 37s to 38s; yellow 31s to 31s 6d. Ashes—pots 33s 6d per cwt; pearls no change.

ARRIVAL OF THE "ARABIA."

Austria meditates War against China!

HALIFAX, March 1.

The royal mail steamship Arabia, from Liverpool on Saturday, the 15th inst., via Queenstown 16th Feb., put in here to day short of coal. She experienced strong westerly gales the whole passage. She has 60 passengers.

The Archduke Maximilian is positively said to have accepted the Mexican throne.

The Tuscarora is reported at Gibraltar where the Sumter still remains without coals.

The expense to England of the Mason and Slidell affair is understood to be £364,000.

It is understood that the address from the French Chambers is to contain a mild rebuke to the Pope, for not listening to the conciliatory proposition of France for the settlement of the Roman question.

The Austrian Concordat is to be revised with the consent of the Pope.

Constantinople, Jan. 15.

A commercial treaty has been signed between Russia and Turkey.

Paris, Feb. 16.

The French papers think the question relative to the Mexican affairs might lead to the fall of the Palmerston Cabinet.

It is believed that England will withdraw from the expedition should its aim be abandoned by France and Spain, and should they interfere in the internal policy of Mexico.

The belief continues in Italy that Austria meditates war against Piedmont.

The emigration of young men from Venetia continues.

The Prince of Wales has left Vienna.

PROSPECTUS OF THE "Scottish American Journal."

A FIRST CLASS FAMILY NEWSPAPER

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF SCOTCHMEN IN AMERICA, AND TO THE ASSIMILATION OF SCOTTISH LITERATURE AND NEWS.

FIFTH YEAR.

ON January 2nd, 1862, was commenced a new volume (V.) of the Scottish American Journal; and in future the numbers issued will constitute a complete volume, of convenient size for binding, and each number will contain a most entertaining and instructive repertory of reading matter, calculated to interest all readers of British origin. The Scottish American Journal, though decidedly international in its constant efforts to promote peace and prosperity between the people of Great Britain and America, is yet emphatically Scottish in its copious records of all events occurring in Scotland that can be regarded of the least interest to natives of that country residing in America; and to this "news from home" is added, weekly a summary of general intelligence from England, Ireland, and other parts of the world.

A distinguishing feature of the Scottish American Journal is its regular re-publication—with additions and alterations—of the "leading articles" of the principal British newspapers and other periodicals upon the most important topics of the day. This feature is a unique one, and has been found very acceptable to the people of British North America, as it supplies a long needful desideratum in the Provinces. In reference to the "Editorials" of the Scottish American Journal, it is a significant fact that the British press frequently acknowledges their importance and force by copiously extracting from our columns and declaring that the Scottish American Journal is the most able and interesting paper published in America. A copious weekly summary is also given of the principal items of American news, and a similar narrative of events transpiring in the various British Provinces, the latter feature supplying a deficiency which was felt in several of the Provinces. Intelligence as to what was transpiring in other parts of the British possessions.

In the forthcoming volume of the Scottish American Journal increased space will be devoted to the literary department in the publication of serial tales and sketches, vividly illustrating the customs, habits, sentiments and general characteristics of the people of Scotland; each tale emanating from the pen of an author of celebrity. As here before, particular care will be exercised in the choice of original poetry, composed by writers of acknowledged genius and purity of thought, resident here or abroad. The first number of the new volume contains the commencement of a deeply interesting tale, entitled

THE LIEUTENANT & HIS SON.

This tale will prove to be one of the most interesting ever published, and will be appreciated by all classes of readers.

A USEFUL IMPLEMENT.

"All farmers and gardeners have felt the necessity of some hand implement, to enable them to cultivate crops planted or sown in drills, from one to two feet apart, with less labor than that of using a common hand hoe. The cultivation of field crops of beets, onions, carrots, turnips, etc., in drills twelve to eighteen inches apart, by the use of the hoe alone, involves a good deal of time and expense, and if we can contrive or invent any implement with which we can do the work more effectually, and in less time than can be done with the hoe, we should avail ourselves of it.

I am now making for my own use a couple of cheap hand barrows, to run between the rows of vegetables, as soon as up, and so frequently thereafter, that the weeds will be effectually kept down by it, except immediately in the rows, which may be pulled out rapidly by small boys who can do little else.

To illustrate the use of this implement, I will take a field of carrots, sown in drills fifteen inches apart. The land should be free from stones, and large lumps of earth, where the seed is sown, as all lands should be, when sown to drill crops, and as soon as the carrots appear let a drag be pushed through the rows, made as follows:

Take a hard wood plank, two inches thick, and one foot wide from which cut off a piece eighteen inches long; then cut off one end with a broad axe or a hatchet so as to turn up like the runner of a sled, so far as the thickness of the plank will admit. Into this plank drive spikes (40 penny nails) in rows, from one to two inches apart, till it is completely filled, up to the curve in front, which will leave the small end of the nails protruding long enough to make an effective harrow on a small scale. On the back of this harrow, a little past the centre towards the back end, attach a handle of suitable length, secured to an iron strap with two arms, coming to a union twelve or eighteen inches above the drag, where a shoulder should receive the handle, which should have a cross piece at the end to take hold of to make it complete.

The cultivation of the crops consists merely in pushing this drag before you, about once in two weeks, through the rows, a man going over an acre in two hours, leaving the thinning out and weeding on the line of the rows to boys.

I have learned that this system, differing merely by drawing instead of pushing the implement, has been practiced by an inventive "Yankee," with the most complete success; and if it be feasible, I shall avail myself of its advantages next season, and I hope that others will make a trial of it since none of us are too old to learn. Different sizes will be required for different width of drills, and it remains to be shown how near the width of the drills the drags, or rather pushers, can be made and not cut the crops.

T. B. MINER.

AN EAR OF CORN.

A statement having appeared that upwards of 1,000 grains had been shelled from one ear of corn, a correspondent of an exchange paper, who thought he could beat it, shelled several ears, which produced as follows:—One 1,050 grains; another 1,100, and another 1,164. Some old farmers say that a paper wrapped around an ear of corn, the ear then taken out, will not contain the shelled corn of that ear. I tried it with three ears, and the paper would not hold the corn; one of these ears had 936 grains on it, of which 535 filled a pint cup. At this rate it would take 24,240 grains to make a bushel.

CATS AND GARDENS.

Every lover of flowers knows that a "bull in a china shop" is not more out of place than a cat in a garden, yet it is not generally known that there is one plant at least which cannot be grown except in the absence of the feline race. The plant is Nemophilla, and it has been frequently noticed that before the seed has been a week in the ground all the cats in the neighborhood will come and roll themselves in the place where it is sown; and although it has no smell, they will single it from among a score of batches of other seeds.—To fairly test the matter, some Nemophilla was sowed in a large vase which stood alone in the centre of a plot of grass, and long before the seed appeared above the ground, three or four cats were frequently noticed at once rolling on the top of the vase. What is the reason of this curious fancy of the cat?

WHY DOES SHE KICK THE MILK OVER.

"Like a cow that gives a good mess of milk, and then kicks it all over," is the proverb that is applied to the man that does a kind act and follows it with a foolish or damaging misdeed. Proverbs are founded on practical truths. It is a truth, then, and a common one, that "a cow gives a good mess of milk, and then kicks it all over."—If a fact, the provero must be not merely a truth, but one founded in reason. So, if the cow stands quiet "till a good mess of milk" has been drawn, there must be a reason for her kicking it over afterwards. And, the reason for her kicking being withdrawn, the probability is that the kicking will either cease or not come in just after milking. Should any reader chance to own these proverbial cows, he may observe that the signal for that kick to the milker allowing his fingers to slip from her teats with a jerk in stripping. If so, just cheat the old cow out of the signal, till the "good mess of milk" is beyond the reach of her kickers.

SAVAGE EXPEDIENT TO OBTAIN WATER.

Livingston, the African traveller, describes an ingenious method by which the Africans obtain water in the desert:—The women tie a bunch of grass to one end of a hole dug as deep as the arm will reach; then ram down the wet sand firmly around it. Applying the mouth to the free end of the reed, they form a vacuum in the grass beneath, in which the water collects, and in a short time rises to the mouth. It will be seen that this simple, but truly philosophical and effectual method might have been applied in many cases in different countries, where water was greatly needed to the saving of life. It seems wonderful that it should have been now first known to the world, and that it should have been habitually practised in Africa, probably for centuries. It seems worthy of being particularly noticed, that it may no longer be neglected for ignorance. It may be highly important to travellers in our deserts and prairies in some parts of which water is known to exist below the surface.

Some gracious scamp has proposed to say that, "it is woman, and as it has worn that should be re-dressed." The rascal ought to suffer the torment of being invited out to a sewing party.

AMONG the most important of modern Medical discoveries stands the Canadian Pain Destroyer. As a Family Medicine it is well and favorably known, relieving thousands from pains from Side, Back and Head, Coughs, Colds Sore Throats, Sprains, Bruises, Cramps in the Stomach, Cholera Morbis, Dysentery, Bowel Complaints, Burns, Scalds, Frost bites, &c.—The Canadian Pain Destroyer has now been before the public for a length of time, and wherever used is well liked, never failing in a single instance to give permanent relief when timely used, and we have never known a single instance of dissatisfaction, where the directions have been properly followed, but on the contrary all are delighted with its operations, and speak in the highest terms of its virtues and magical effects.

We speak from experience in this matter, having tested it thoroughly, and therefore those who are suffering from any of the complaints for which it is recommended may depend upon it being a sovereign remedy.

The astonishing efficacy of the Canadian Pain Destroyer, incuring the diseases for which it is recommended, and its wonderful success in subduing the torturing pains of Rheumatism, and in relieving Nervous Affections, entitle it to a high rank in the list of remedies for these complaints. Orders are coming in from Medicine Dealers, in all parts of the Country for further supplies, and each testifying as to the universal satisfaction it gives.

LIGHTNING RODS

JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH

STRATTS' RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!

AND ENLARGED

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers: is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod. Professor Croft has a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substitutes this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the fine conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, easing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fail in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Common Iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

Toronto, Sept. 15, 1860.

I HEREBY CERTIFY THAT I HAVE superintended the erection of Galvanic Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put up for me two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods, so highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

Above we present you with a perfect likeness of Tomo, a chief of a tribe of the strange race of Natives, who once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of himself, his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills.

To inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills," has spent the greater part of his life in travelling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of Huahuahy Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "Mountain Herb Pills" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanacs and Pamphlets.

It is an established fact, that all diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and the whole system quickly complains. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—and all from a slight impurity at the fountain head of the—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life soon flies out. These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Heads ac. &c. This Anti Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the impure seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and sweet, cleaning and resuscitating the vital organs.

Placed indeed, is it to us, that we are able to place within your reach a medicine like the "Mountain Herb Pills," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

GREAT FEMALE MEDICINE

Females who value health, should never be without them. They purify the blood, remove obstructions of all kinds, cleanse the skin of all pimples and blotches, and bring the rich color of health to the pale cheek.

☞ Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Tombs of Aborigines in Mexico. Get the Almanac of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "Great Physician of the Ancients."

CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

What is more fearful than the breaking down of the nervous system? To be excitable or nervous in a small degree is most distressing, for where can a remedy be found? There is one:—drink but little wine, beer, or spirits, or far better none; take no coffee,—weak tea being preferable; get all the fresh air you can; take three or four pills every night; eat plenty of solids, avoid the use of slops; and if these golden rules are followed you will be happy in mind and strong in body, and forget you have any nerves.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

If there is one thing more than another for which these Pills are so famous it is their purifying properties, especially the power of cleansing the blood from all impurities, and removing dangerous and suspended secretions. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, they never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about what is required.

SICK HEADACHES AND WANT OF APPETITE.

These feelings which so seldom us, most frequently arise from annoyances or trouble, from obstructed perspiration, or from eating and drinking what is unfit for us, thus disordering the liver and stomach. These organs must be regulated if you wish to be well. The Pills if taken according to the printed instructions, will quickly restore a healthy action to both liver and stomach, whence follow as a natural consequence, a good appetite and a clear head. In the East and West Indies scarcely any other medicine is ever used for these disorders.

DISORDERS OF THE KIDNEYS.

In all diseases affecting these organs, whether they secrete too much or too little water; or whether they be affected with stone or gravel, or with aches or pains settled in the loins over the regions of the kidneys, these Pills should be taken according to the printed directions, and the Ointment should be well rubbed into the small of the back at bed time. This treatment will give almost immediate relief when all other means have failed.

FOR STOMACHS OUT OF ORDER.

No medicine will so effectually improve the tone of the stomach as these Pills; they remove all acidity, occasioned either by intemperance or improper diet. They reach the liver and reduce it to a healthy action; they are wonderfully efficacious in cases of spasms,—in fact they never fail in curing all disorders of the liver and Stomach.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy in the world for the following diseases.

Ague,	Inflammation,
Asthma,	Jaundice,
Bilious Complaints,	Liver Complaints,
Blotches on the Skin,	Lumbago,
Bowel Complaints,	Piles,
Colics,	Rheumatism,
Constipation of the Bowels,	Retention of Urine,

	&c., &c.

☞ CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

TOWNSHIP OF OTONABEE, Oct. 28, 1861.

To Joseph R. Walton, Esq., Agent of the Canada West Farmers' M. & S. Insurance Co.

Dear Sir,—Please express my thanks to the Directors of your Company for their prompt and liberal settlement of my claim for loss by fire, and promptness of your agent, Mr. Ellis, in attending to the same.

I am happy to say that the accident by fire, mentioned by me in my claim, was entirely accidental, and I have no reason to suspect any incendiary design in the matter.

I have had many years experience in insurance business, and only seven days since the occurrence of the fire! Such promptness on the part of the Company must convince all seeking insurance of the advantages to be derived by insuring their property in the C. W. F. M. & S. I. C. of Hamilton.

L. W. BECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor repeats that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION, to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

THE ORPHAN BOY WE KNEW.

Oh, what is youth?—a vision, a cheek where beauty bloomed,
When first we draw our quickening breath, we are journeying to the tomb,
When vigor nerves the youthful arm, or hope the youthful heart,
How apt are we to let the thought of early death
How seldom do we bear in mind one hour is not our own,
Nor pause to think within our breasts the seeds of death are sown;
Some ripen in their infancy, in manhood not a few,
'Twas in that stage he faded—died—the orphan boy we knew

His youthful cheeks were flushed with health, his eye with sparkling glance,
His swelling heart with lively thoughts of plans and recompense;
The prospect of a length of days would flash before his mind,
Perhaps he little thought that death pursued so close behind.
His years of manhood just begun when fancy paints the way,
The sun of life appeared to him unclouded in its ray.
It scarce had seen meridian height when death the curtain drew,
His sun had set to all on earth, the orphan boy we knew.

He could know but little pleasure, he could know but little grief,
The years allotted to him were only few and brief;
He might share the joys of boyhood, or a glimpse of manhood's woes,
But he died a youthful pilgrim in this wilderness below.
He knew little of the history of this dread world of ours;
He scarce had grasped the shadow before the substance flew,
When the lamp of life was darkened, of the orphan boy we knew.

His looks we still remember, in days not long gone by,
Their youth and beauty mingling with each other seemed to vie,
That brightness soon o'ershadowed like the rays of setting sun,
Consumption soon completed the work it had begun.
There stood the king of terrors, on the watch with quivering bow,
The royal mandate he received: Quick, lay thy victim low.
The arrow flies, that face is changed from rose to lillies hue,
He faded like an autumn leaf, the orphan boy we knew.

William McGee's Monkey.

A SCOTCH STORY.

I dinna think that in a' nature there's a mair curiouser creature than a monkey. I mak this observe frae being witness to an extraordinar' event that took place in Hamilton. Folk may talk as they like about monkeys, and cry them down for being stupid and mischievous, I for one will not gang that length. Whatever they may be on the score of mischief, there can be nae doubt, that, as far as gumption is concerned, they are just uncommon; and for wit and fun they would beat ony man b'ack and blue. In fact, I dinna think that monkeys are beasts ava. I hae a half notion that they are just wee hairy men that canna, or rather that winna speak, in case they be made to work like ither folk, instead of leading a life of idleness.

But to the point: I ance had a monkey, ane of the drollest-looking deevils ye ever saw. He was gayan big for a monkey, and was hairy a' over except his face and his bit hurdies, which had a degree of bareness about them, and were nearly as scarlet as a lady's loof. Weel, what think ye that I did wi' the beastie? Odds, man, I dressed him up like a Heelandman, and put a kilt upon him, and a lang-tailed red coat, and a blue bannet, which for security's sake I tied, woman-like, below his chin wi' twa bits of yellow ribbon. I not only did this, but I learnt him to walk on his twa hinder legs, and to carry a stick in his right hand when he gaed out, the better to support him in his peregrinations. He was for a' the world like a wee man in kilts—nae much sae that when Glengarry the great Heeland chieftain who happened to be at Hamilton on a visit to the duke, saw him by chance, he swore by the powers that he was like ane o' the Celtic Society, and that if I liket he would endeavour to get him admitted a member of that body! I thocht at the time that Glengarry was jokin, but I hae since had guid reason for thinking that he was in real earnest, as Andrew Brand says that he and the Celts hae been like to cut ane another's throats, and that he micht mean this as an affront upon them. Hoosomever, I mean do Glengarry the justice to say, that had he got my Nosey (that was his name) made a member, he wadna hae proved the least wilty or courageous of the society, and would hae done nae disgrace to the chief's recommendation.

But I am fleeing awa like a shuttle frae the subject on hand. Weel, it turned out in this manner, as ye shall hear. Ane afternoon towards the gloamin I was obliged to tak a step doun to the cross, wi' a web under my arm, which I had finished for Mr. Weft, the muslin manufacturer. By way of freak, a gayan foolish ane I allow, I brocht Nosey along wi' me. He had on, as for ordinar, his Heeland dress, and walkit behind me, wi' his tail stuck in his hand, and a kind o' stickin out frae below his kilt, as if he had been my flunky. It was aiblins a queer sight, and as may be supposed I drew a hail crood o' bairns after me, hawlaing out, "here's Willy McGee's monkey," and gain him nits and gingerbread, and makin a muckle o' the creatur as could be; for Nosey was a great favourite in the town, and every body likit him for his droll tricks, and the way he used to grin and dance, and tumble over his head, to amuse them.

On entering Mr. Weft's shop I found it empty; there was a living soul within. I supposed he had gone out for a licht; and went to the back shop, leaving Nosey in the front ane. I sat for twa or three minutes but nobody made an appearance. At last the front door, which I had ta'en care to shut after me, opened, and I lookt to see who it could be, thinking that nae doubt it was Mr. Weft or his apprentice. It was neither the ane nor the ither, but a strong middle-aged, red-faced Heelandman, wi' specks on, and wi' a kilt and a bannet, by a' the world like my monkey. Now, what think ye Nosey was about a' this time. He was sittin behind the counter upon the lang three-leggit stool that stood foment Mr. Weft's desk, and was turning over the leaves of his ledger wi' a look which, to auld-fashioned sagacitousness, was wunderfu' to behold. I was nae nicked at the sight that I paid nae sort of attention to the Heelandman, but continued looking frae the back shop to Nosey, lauching a' the time in my sleeve—for I jealoused that some queer scene would tak place between the twa.—And I wasna far wrang, for the stranger, takin' out a pound frae his spleuchan, speered at him, in his droll norlan dialect, if he could change a note, when I heard this I thocht I would hae lanched outricht; and naething but sheer curiosity to see how the thing would end made me keep my gravity. It was plain that Donald had ta'en Nosey for ane of his ain countrymen—and the thing wasna to be wondered at, and that for three reasons:

Firstly, the shop was rather darkish.

Secondly, the Heelandman had no specks, as I hae just said, and it was likely on this account that he was rather short-sighted; and

Thirdly, Nosey, wi' his kilt, and bannet, and red coat, was, to a' intents and purposes, as like a human creature as a monkey could weel be.

Nae sooner then had he got it than he opened it out, lookit at it wi' his wee glowerin, restless een, as if to see that it wasnt a forgery. He then shook his head like a doctor, when he's no very sure what's wrang wi' a person but wants to mak' it appear that he kens a about it, and continued in this style till the Heelandman's patience began to get exhausted.

"Can ye no change the note, old shentleman?" quo Donald. Nosey gi'ed his head anither shake, and lookit uncommon wise.

"Is the note no good, sir?" spoke the Heelandman, a second time; but the creatur, instead of answering him, only gi'ed anither of his wise shakes, as much as to say, "I'm no very sure about it." At this Donald lost temper. "If the note doesna please you, sir," quo' he, "I'll thank ye to gie it back again, and I'll gang to some other place." And he stretchit out his hand to tauk haud o't, when my frien with the tail lifting up his stick, lent him sic a whack ower the fingers as made him pu' back in the twinkling of an ee.

"O curse ye, ye auld scoundrel," the man said; "do ye mean to tak my money frae me?" And he lifted up a rung big enough to fell, and let flee at the monkey; but Nosey was ower quick for him, and jumping aside, he lichted on a shelf before ane could say Jock Robinson. Here he rowed up the note like a baw in his hand and put it into his coat pouch like ony ither rational cratur. Not only this, but he mockit the Heelandman by a' manner of means, shootin out his tongue at him, spitting at him, and grinning at him with his queer outlandish physognomy. Then he wad tak haud of his tail in his twa hands and wag it at Donald, and steeking his nieves he would seem to threaten him wi' a leatherin. A'thegither he was desperate impident, and enough to try the patience of a saunt, no to speak o' a het-bluided Heelandman. It was guid for sair een to see how Donald behaved on this occasion. He raged like ane demented, missing the monkey beyond measure, and swearing as many Gaelic oaths as micht hae suited an ordinar man for a twalmonth. During this time I nitses steered a foot, but keept keekin' frae the back shop upon a' that was ganging on. I was highly delighted; and jealousing Nosey was ower supple to be easily catched, I had nae apprehension for the event, and remained snug in my berth to see the upshot.

In a short time in comes Mr. Weft, wi' a piece of sowing paper in his hand, that he had got frae the next door to licht the shop; and nae sooner did Donald see him than he ax'd him for his note.

"What note, my honest man?" said Mr. Weft.

"The note" quo' Donald, "that the auld scoundrel, your grandfatner, stole frae me."

"My grandfather!" answered the ither wi' amazement. "I am thinking, honest man, ye hae had a glass our muckle. My grandfather has been dead for sax'teen years and I ne'er heard tell till now that he was a thief."

"Weel, weel, then, quo' the Heeland-man, "I don't care naething about it. If he's no your grandfaith r, he'll be your father, or your brither, or your cousin."

"My faither, my brither or my cousin!" repeated Mr. Weft. I maun tell ye plainly frien, that I hae neither faither, brither nor cousin of ony description, on this side of the grave. I dinna understand ye, honest man, but I reckon that ye hae sat ower lang at the whickey, and my advice to ye is to stap awa hame and sleep it aff."

At this speech the Heelandman lost a' patience, and lookit sae awfully fierce, that once or twice I was on the nick of coming foerit and explaining how matters stood; but curiosity keepit me chained to the back shop, and I jist thought I would bide a wee and see how the affair was like to end.

"Pray, wha are you, sir?" said Donald, putting his hands in his sides, and looking fierce, as his speaker upon Mr. Weft, like a Gerd-helland. "Am I no your sir, that dare to speak to me in the manner?"

"Wha am I?" said the ither, stopping the remnant of the paper, which was coming close to his fingers, "I am Saunders Weft, manufacturer in Hamilton—that's wha I am."

"And I am Donald Campbell, piper's sister's son to his Grace the great, grand Duke of Argyle," thundered out the Heelandman, wi' a voice that was fearsome to hear.

"And what about that?" quo' Mr Weft, rather sappishly, as I thocht. "If ye were the great, grand Duke of Argyle himsel, as ye ca' him, I'll no permit you to kick up a dust in my shop."

"Ye scoundrel," said Donald, seizing Mr Weft by the throat, and shaking him till he tottered like a trapen leaf, "div ye mean to speak ill of his Grace the Duke of Argyle?" And he gi'ed him anither shake—then, laying haud of his nose, he swore that he would put as lang as a cow's tail, if he didna that instant restore him his lost property. At this sicht I began to grew a' ower, and now saw the necessity of stapping ben, and saving my employer frae farther damage, bodily and otherwise. Nae sooner had I made my appearance than Donald let go his grip of Mr. Weft's nose, and the latter, in a great passion cried out, "William McGee, I tak ye to witness that I hae sufferit frae this bluid-thirsty Heelandman! It's no to be endured in a Christian country. I'll hae the law of him that I will. I'll be whappit but I'll hae amends, although it costs me twenty pounds."

"What's the matter?" quo I, pretending ignorance of the bail concern. "What, in the name of Nebuchadnezzar, has set ye thegither by the lugs!"

Then Mr. Weft began his tale, how he had been collared and weel nigh thrappled in his ain shop. Then the ither tauld how, in the first place, Mr. Weft's grandfaither, as he called Nosey, had stolen his note, and how, in the second place, Mr. Weft himself had insulted the great, grand Duke of Argyle. In a word there was a desperate kick-up between them, and ane threepping that he would tak the law of the ither immediately. Na, in this respects Donald gaed the greatest lengths, for he swore that rather than be defeated he wad carry his cause to the House of Lords, although it cost him thretty pound sterling. I now saw it was time to put in a word.

"Hots-tuts, gentlemen," quo I, "what's the use of a' this clishmaclaver? Ye've baith gotten the wrang sow by the lug, or my name's no William McGee. I'll wager ye a penny piece, that my monkey is at the bottom of the business."

Nae sooner had I spoken the word, than the twa lookin round the shop, spied the beastie sitting upon the shelf, grinning at them, and putting out his tongue, and waggle-waggling his walking stick over his left elbow, as if he had been playing upon the fiddle. Mr. Weft at this apparation set up a loud lauch; his passion left him in a moment when he saw the ridiculous mistake the Heelandman had ta'an intill, and I thocht he would hae bursted his sides wi' even-down merriment. At first Donald lookit desperate angry, and, judging from the way he was twisting about his mouth and rowing his een, I supposed that he intended some deadly skaith to the monkey. But his gude sense, which Heelandmen are no a'thegither destitute, got the better of his anger, and he roared and lauched like the very mischief. Nor was this a', for nae sooner had he began to lauch than the monkey did the same thing, he held his sides in precisely the same manner, imitating his actions in the maist amusin way imaginable. This only set Donald alaughing mair than ever, and when he lifted up his neive, and shook it at Nosey in a gude humored way, what think ye that the cratur did? Oddsman, he took the note frae his pouch, where it lay rowed up like a baw, and papping it at Donald, hit him as fairly upon the nose, as if it had been shot out of a weel-aimed musket. There was nae resisting this. The bail three, or rather the hail four, for Nosey joined us, set up a loud lauch, and the Heelandman's was the loudest of a' showing that he really was a man of sense, and could tak a joke as weel as his neighbors.

When the lauchin had a wee subsided, Mr. Campbell, in order to show that he had nae ill will to Mr. Weft, axed his pardon for the rough way he had treated him, but the worthy manufacturer wadna hear o't. "Houts, man," quo he, "dinna say a word about it. It's a mistak a'thegither, and Solomon himsell, ye ken, wiles gaed wrang." Whereupon the Heelandman bought a Kilmarnick nightcap, price elevenpence happeny, frae Mr. Weft, and paid him wi part of the very note that broucht on the ferly I hae just been relating. But his good will didna end here, for he insisted on takin' us a'—Nosey amang the lave—to the nerest public house, where he gi'ed us a friendly glass, and we keept tawking about monkeys and what not, in a manner at once edifying and amusing to hear.

DRAWING NEARER.

"One day nearer," sings the mariner,
As he glides the waters o'er,
While the light is softly dying
O'er his distant native shore.
Thus the Christian on life's ocean,
As the light boat cuts the foam,
In the evening cries with rapture—
"I am one day nearer home."

SUBTLETY.

Oliver Cromwell was one of the shrewdest of men, yet he well understood the value of integrity. His remark, made to a closer but unscrupulous lawyer of his day is well worthy of consideration: "I understand that you have of late been vastly wary in conduct—do not be too confident of this; subtlety may deceive you, integrity never will."

Is anything more true? The most cunning schemer is sure some day to be detected. But the true man need never fear. His character must always rise to its just level. Mists may make a temporary obscuration, and obstacles may for a time seem insurmountable, but in the end, integrity will gain the deserved guerdon. "Subtlety may deceive you, integrity never will."

A MARVELLOUS CONJUROR.

About the beginning of the last century a species of Cagliostro, or rather a kind of superior Wizard of the North, made his appearance at St. Petersburg, and astonished the natives by his marvellous performances. His name was Parnetti, and his fame is yet retained in the memory of those who witnessed his unrivalled talents.

The Czar, Alexander, having heard Parnetti much spoken of, was desirous of seeing him, and one day it was announced to the conjuror that he would have the honor of giving a representation of his magical powers at court, the hour for him to make his appearance being 7 o'clock.

A brilliant and numerous assembly of ladies, and courtiers, presided over by the Czar, had met, but the conjuror was absent.

Parnetti had not only failed in being in waiting, but had caused the court to wait, and Alexander was not more patient than Louis XIV. A quarter of an hour passed, half an hour, and no Parnetti! Messengers who had been sent to search for him, returned unsuccessful.

The anger of the Czar, with difficulty restrained, displayed itself in threatening exclamations. At length, after the lapse of an hour, the door of the saloon opened, and the gentleman of the chamber announced Parnetti, who presented himself with a salaam and bold front, and the serenity of one who had nothing to reproach himself with. The Czar, however, was highly displeased; but Parnetti assumed an air of astonishment and replied with the greatest coolness: "Did not your majesty command my presence at 7 o'clock, precisely?"

"Just so!" exclaimed the Czar, at the height of exasperation.

"Well, then," said Parnetti, "let your majesty deign to look at your watch, and you will perceive that I am exact, and that it is just 7 o'clock." The Czar, pulling out his watch violently in order to confound what he considered a piece of downright insolence, was completely amazed.

The watch marked 7 o'clock. He looked at the clock of the Saloon, which had been consulted 20 times during the space that the assembly had been kept waiting. The clock also marked and struck 7 o'clock. In turn the courtiers also drew out their watches, which were found as usual regulated by that of the sovereign. Seven o'clock, indicated with a common accord all the watches and clocks of the palace. The art of the magician was at once manifest in his strange retrogression in the march of time.

To anger succeeded astonishment and admiration. Perceiving that the Czar smiled, Parnetti thus addressed him: "Your Majesty will pardon me. It was by the performance of this trick that I was desirous to make my first appearance before you. But if I know how precious truth is at court it is at least necessary that your watch should tell it you, sire. If you consult it now you will find it nearly the real time."

The Czar once more drew forth his watch; it pointed to a few minutes past 8. The same rectification had taken place in all the clocks of the palace. This exploit was followed by others equally amusing and surprising. At the close of the performances the Czar, after having complimented Parnetti, brought to his remembrance that in the course of the evening's amusements, he had declared that such was the power of his art that he could penetrate everywhere.

"Yes, sire," replied the conjuror, with modest assurance. "What!" exclaimed the Czar, 'were I to order all the doors to be closed and guarded!" "Into this palace, sire, and into the apartment of your Majesty, quite as easy as I could enter my own house," said Parnetti.

"Well, then," said the Czar, "I shall have ready in my closet the price of this evening's amusements—one thousand roubles. But I forewarn you the doors shall be closed and carefully guarded."

"To-morrow at mid-day I shall have the honor of presenting myself before your majesty," replied Parnetti, and withdrew.—The gentlemen of the household followed the conjuror to make sure that he quitted the palace. He was accompanied to his lodgings, and a number of the police surrounded his dwelling from the moment he entered it. The palace was instantly closed with positive orders not to suffer under any pretext whatever, any one to enter, were he prince or valet, until the Czar himself should command the doors to be opened. These orders were strictly enjoined, confidential persons having watched their execution. The exterior openings of the palace were guarded by the soldiery. All the approaches to the palace were protected by dignitaries, for whom a simple professor of the art of leger-de-main possessed no means of bribery. In short, for greater security all the keys had been carried to the Imperial cabinet.

A few minutes previous to the hour fixed for Parnetti's interview with the Czar, the chamberlain on service brought to his Majesty a despatch which a messenger had handed him through an opening in the door. It was a report from the minister of police that Parnetti had not left home.

"Aha! he has found out the undertaking is impracticable, and he abandoned it," observed the Czar, with a smile.

Twelve o'clock sounded; while the last stroke yet vibrated the door communicating with the bed-room of the Czar opened, and Parnetti appeared! The Czar drew back a couple of paces, his brow darkened, and after a momentary silence, while fixing a suspicious look on Parnetti, he said,

"Are you aware that you may become a very dangerous individual?"

"Yes, sir," he replied, "but I am only an humble conjuror, with no other ambition than that of amusing your Majesty."

"Here," said the Czar, "are the thousand roubles for last night, and one thousand more for this day's visit."

Parnetti, in offering his thanks, was interrupted by the Czar, who, with a thundering air, inquired of him,

"Do you count on some time in St. Petersburg?"

"Sire," he replied, "I intend setting off this week, unless your Majesty orders a prolongation of my sojourn."

"No," he hastily observed, "it is not my intention to detain you. And, moreover," continued he, with a smile, "I should vainly attempt to detain you against your will. You know how to leave St. Petersburg as easily as you have your way into this place."

"I could do so, sire," said Parnetti, "but far from wishing to quit St. Petersburg stealthily or mysteriously, I am desirous of quitting it in the most public manner possible, by giving to the inhabitants of your capital a striking example of my magical powers."

Parnetti could not leave like an ordinary mortal! It was necessary that he should crown his success in the Russian capital by some thing surpassing his previous efforts. Therefore, on the evening preceding the day fixed for his departure, he announced that he would leave St. Petersburg the following day at 10 o'clock in the morning, and that he would quit at all the city gates at the same moment!

Public curiosity was excited to the highest degree by this announcement. St. Petersburg at that time had 15 gates, which were encompassed by multitudes eager to witness his marvellous departure.

At 10 o'clock the spectators at the various gates all declared that Parnetti, whom they all perfectly recognised, passed through precisely at that hour. "He walked at a slow pace and with head erect, in order to be better seen," they said, "and bade us adieu in a clear audible voice."

These unanimous testimonies were confirmed by the written declaration of the officers placed at the gate to inspect the passports of travellers. The inspection of Parnetti's passport was inscribed in the 15 registers. Who could do the like now?

COLD BEDROOMS.

A person accustomed to undress in a room without fire, and to seek repose in a cold bed, will not experience the least inconvenience, even in the severest weather. The natural heat of his body will very speedily render him more comfortably warm than the individual who sleeps in a heated apartment, and in a bed thus artificially warmed, you will be extremely liable to a sensation of chilliness as soon as the artificial heat is dissipated. But this is not all—the constitution of the former will be rendered more robust, and far less susceptible to the influences of atmospherical vicissitudes than that of the latter.—Journal of Health.

SAWING MATCH AT LOBO.

A great sawing match took place last week at Lobo, which was attended by a large number of people. The contest arose with reference to the work which could be executed by one of Bruce's Sawing Machines. Mr. Archibald McIntyre having one of these Machines, undertook to cut 50 cords of wood within ten hours. A bet of $40 was made by Mr. Donald Seaton that the work could not be done, and hence the issue. Tuesday was the day appointed, and farmers from far and near came to witness the exploit. Mr. McIntyre having placed himself at the cross-cut saw, cut in nine hours fifty-three cords of wood, and concluded the task amid much applause.—Other bets were then made, among others one especially, that a cord of wood could not be cut in six minutes by the machine. A large number were quite sure this could not be done, but the saw went through the required number of cuts in four and a half minutes! Subsequently, a good deal of fun ensued, and the day closed amid much hilarity. This machine manufactured by Mr. Bruce of this city, has found its way to Cuba, and many have been sold into the Lower Provinces. Sixty of them have been made during the last six months, and we understand that Mr. Bruce feels himself to be in a position to challenge the world to produce a machine which will excel or equal the performances of his Patent Cross Cut Sawing Machines.—London Free Press.

BITTER FEMALE SECESSIONISTS.

Four young gentlemen, who have been residing in Alexandria for some months, a few days ago, engaged apartments of a highly respectable lady who resides in Prince street, with her two daughters, aged respectively sixteen and eighteen. Although the lady and her daughters were open and avowed secessionists, the former having two sons in the rebel army, the young gentlemen were nevertheless surprised to hear them speak so contemptuously and bitterly of the Union. The young gentlemen it appears, took it into their heads to hoist the Stars and Stripes on the top of their dwelling one day, upon which the lady and her daughters, when they discovered it floating peacefully above them, raised a shout of indignation. One of the young ladies then clambered to the top of the house, at the risk of life and limb, and with the spirit of a tigress, tore down the national flag, trampled it beneath her feet, and finally threw the fragments into the stove. Not content with this disrespect, this young traitoress took the ashes of the burned flag and pitched them contemptuously into the street. The worst feature, perhaps, of this whole affair is that this whole family is from the northern part of New York, and have only lived a few years in Alexandria. Their friends and relatives still reside in New York.

COURTING BY DEPUTY.

In a trial in the Queen's Bench last week, in which Moulvin Mussel Goddess, was concerned, he was asked if he had not married an English wife. He replied that he had, and in answer to the question how he made love to her, replied "I said what little I could to her [laughter], and besides that, those who had involved me in the marriage said the rest for me." [Laughter.]

☞ A man can't help what is done behind his back," as the scamp said when kicked out of doors.

A LAUGHABLE WHISKEY SCRAPE.

Last week a man named Fogherty, who resides near the Grand Trunk Station found, on marching home in the evening, that his wife was drunk, and lying in bed. Fogherty, who is a hopeless tippler himself, pretended to be very disgusted with his wife's misconduct, and insisted that she should get him his supper. She replied that he might go and get his supper where he got his whiskey! This was too much for the fine feelings of Fogherty, who threatened to have his wife immediately sent to the "lock-up." This again was more than Biddy could stand, so up she got, and insisted that she would put him in the "lock-up." To fulfil their threats each went to the constable to give each other up, when that functionary having heard the two stories, concluded to give the husband quarters in the "lock-up," and sent the wife home. The Mayor having disposed of the case, Fogherty was fined, which with the costs amounted to $5, and being unable to pay, he was sent to jail for five days. When two of the days had elapsed, Biddy took compassion on her husband, who however, felt so comfortable in the "jug" that he had to be ejected by force. Enraged at being set at liberty, Fogherty went to the Sheriff next morning and offered to serve out his time in limbo, provided the Sheriff would pay him part of the $5!—Stratford Beacon.

THE LATE COLLIERY ACCIDENT AT HARTLEY.

THE FUNERAL.

The funeral of the victims took place on Sunday, January 25th. The Newcastle Journal of that date says:—

This afternoon the bodies of the two hundred slain by the deadly carbonic oxide have been solemnly interred in the silent grave. Such a spectacle as we have witnessed has never been seen before by any Englishman. Half-past one o'clock was the time fixed for the funeral, which had to take place at Earsdon, some three or four miles from here. Long before that time, however, a crowd, the numbers of which it would be impossible to calculate accurately, was collected on the spot.—Those who composed it completely surrounded the pit heap, swarmed all along the road leading to the village, and were crammed in one dense mass opposite to the houses. A great number evidently belonged to the class not much affected, velvet waistcoats and white feathers being very common articles of apparel. It cannot be denied, however, that they were visibly impressed with the solemnity of the occasion. Not a few of the women were weeping bitterly, while the gloomy looks and suppressed voices of the men showed that they also were affected.

. . . At last one cottage after another the sounds of singing ceased, and one other work began. Amid the fretful wailing of children, and the cry of agonized women the bodies were brought forth and placed upon the uncouth hearses. In some of the carts there was only one coffin, in others there were as many as seven. In almost every case, however, a white cloth was thrown over the black deal box, on the lid of which was generally written in chalk the name of the man whose body it contained. Thus filled, one after another of the carts moved slowly away from the spot. Each followed by its own especial mourners; and it is impossible to describe the effect produced by this strange procession of death. The carts moved so slowly that several hours had elapsed before the last was filled with its awful burden. Then, looking from the cottages, as far as the eye could reach, on the road leading to the quiet little church at Earsdon, a mingled crowd of spectators, mourners and carts covered with huge white sheets, was all that could be seen. Not less than fifty of these carts were at one moment making their way towards the churchyard. There was something dreadful in thinking of the desolation which the departing carts left behind them.

MEMORIAL OF THE PRINCE CONSORT, AND THE GREAT EXHIBITION OF 1851.

In reply to Mr. Godwin's letter, on the part of the Memorial Committee, to his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the following communication has been received. We are enabled to give it, that our readers may have the whole correspondence on what was, we believe, the first public letter written by his Royal Highness:—

CANADA'S OPPORTUNITY.

(From the Times, Feb. 12.)

The last intelligence from Canada contains additional proof that the sense of danger has strengthened the bond between that colony and this country. Our columns of yesterday contained an account of the extraordinary exertions made by the War-office for the despatch of troops and stores across Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and of the devotion with which these exertions were seconded by the colonial military authorities. A still more gratifying fact is the cordiality with which they were received and helped forward on their adventurous journey by the settlers themselves. The lumberers of New Brunswick submitted cheerfully to depredations on their snake-fences, and did their best to keep the road clear; the villagers of Lower Canada, headed by their cures, opened their houses to them, provided provisions for them, and volunteered to take care of any disabled soldiers. So marked was the hospitality of the French habitans to the troops landed at Bic under the command of Colonel Peacocke which marched thence to Riviere du Loup, that the Governor General has thought it right to thank them in the name of the Government through a letter to the Bishop of Tloa, Administrator of Quebec. The loyal tone of the colonial press on the subject of these reinforcements tells the same story, and we are assured that higher than selfish motives make the chief towns of Canada contend with each other for the honor of having a crack regiment quartered within them.—When the Mail left battalions were arriving, by detachments of 150 men and by stages of about 30 miles a day, from St. John and Halifax, and were to be distributed, in bodies of various strength, at Montreal, Quebec, Kingston, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Guelph, Isle-aux-Noix, Victoria bridge and St. Catherines. Other strategical positions were occupied by companies of the Royal Canadian Rifles, and, so far from relaxing in vigilance as the immediate cause of it was removed, both the Government and the people are becoming more and more alive to the duty of placing the militia in a state of permanent efficiency. It was expected that a commission would be named to report on the defences of the frontier and other measures of military precaution, and a staff of Imperial officers seem to have been already placed at the disposal of the Provincial Government for purposes of organization. Meanwhile military districts were being formed on the borders of the Lakes. These measures, satisfactory as they are, have not been adopted a moment too early, for Congress, with bankruptcy staring it in the face, has made large appropriations for the purpose of fortifying the points which menace the Southern boundary of Upper Canada.

How much all this will ultimately cost the Imperial Exchequer, and what changes it may bring about in Colonial administration, cannot yet be told, but our efforts will certainly not have been wasted. It was a golden opportunity for garrisoning Canada properly without exciting American jealousy, and as a mere essay in winter campaigning it will have been almost worth the expense. The effect of the crisis on the Canadian Legislature can hardly be otherwise than salutary. They will have seen that England is prepared to come to their rescue with the whole force of the empire in case of emergency, but they will also see that they had a narrow escape of being invaded unprepared. It will have taught them two lessons,—the one, that even if the Mother Country should continue to find accoutrements and ammunition for their provincial corps, nothing but regular training can convert them into soldiers; the other, that recourse must be had to direct taxation or increased economy for the means of real self-defence. It is economy which will prove the harder lesson to learn in Canada, as it has proved in the United States. Individual energy is so great in a new country as almost to compensate for the difficulty of getting a company together for drill at some central rendezvous from a population so thinly scattered. But the tax-gatherers are even more odious to the English emigrant than he is to the Englishman at home. It is in fact mainly to escape his visits that the emigrants have broken the ties of kindred and neighborhood, and faced the terrors real and imaginary, of a Canadian climate. If he finds himself paying the same taxes as in the Mother Country, he fancies that somehow he cannot be better off, though the well-stocked farm-yard and the cheap plenty of all the necessaries of life testify to the true source of Colonial wealth and prosperity. At all events he would rather not see and feel himself deprived of so much of his profits, and so he prefers to buy his tea, his cloth, his cotton, or his hardware a little dearer, instead of paying money out of his pocket.—Backed, of course, by the manufacturers, he clamours for a high Tariff, and hardly thinks, perhaps, of that other method of making accounts square which consists in reducing the rate of outgoings. We do not now speak of other and more questionable items of expenditure, but the sums advanced by the Canadian Government on public works are probably much greater in proportion to its income than those which have half-ruined France. There is something grand in those colossal enterprises of railway communication, but if posterity is ever to reap the advantage of them, they should be conducted with more prudence and more honesty than they have been hitherto.

There is one point of view in which the conduct of Canada in levying oppressive import duties on articles imported from the Mother Country appears to us peculiarly shortsighted. There may be special reasons for levying such duties in India, and at all events, India has but her own consumption to consider. It is far otherwise with Canada. A glance at the map will show that the line of the St. Lawrence is the shortest route between Great Britain and the populous and growing emporiums of the Western States of the Union. The Chicago grain merchants fully appreciate this fact, and their steady opposition to any aggressions which might lead to this outlet being closed against their produce is one of the best safeguards for pacific counsels at Washington. Their journals are filled with elaborate arguments against the monopolists of the Eastern States, showing how suicidal have been the selfish tactics of the latter, and how much cheaper it is to export through the Lakes and free Canals of Canada than by Buffalo and New York. The Banks and Governments of Canada have shown a laudable anxiety for the preservation of his trade, the importance of which has been described by Sir Edmund Head in most forcible terms. A Reciprocity Treaty has been concluded, tolls have been abolished, steamers multiplied and accelerated, and the Erie Canal already finds it difficult to compete for the commerce of Illinois and Indiana with its Canadian rivals. How is it that when Canada has shown so much forethought about exports she should have adopted so opposite a principle in dealing with imports? It is true that the extravagant Protectionism of the United States has established a Tariff so monstrous that even the Canadian 25 per cent. on English manufactures compares favourably with it. The difference, we believe, is sufficient to secure for Canada a part of that advantage which she might appropriate entirely to herself. With free ports on the shores of the St. Lawrence, as well as on the Lakes, she might now be engrossing the carrying trade between Europe and the great agricultural States of the Far West. This, then, is the problem now presented to Canadian politicians. With a little more direct taxation and a little less extravagance in local jobs they might at once defy invasion, and appropriate a source of wealth which promises to be almost inexhaustible. Recent events among their neighbours have turned the tide of emigration in their favor, and a confidence is felt in the destinies of the North American colonies which did not exist a few years ago.

ANOTHER EXPLOSION.

FATAL ACCIDENT FROM USING COAL OIL.

A SERVANT GIRL BURNED TO DEATH—HER BROTHER SERIOUSLY INJURED.

From the Detroit Advertiser.

Right upon the heel of the tremendous explosion of the oil works on Monday, followed another upon a smaller scale, though with fatal results. In the evening, about 9 o'clock, the servant girl of R. Wheeler, whose name was Lizzie Orth, returned from church, she was accompanied by her brother and another young man, both of whom she invited into the kitchen to see a new kind of gas lamp, which she was using. With a two quart can in one hand and a lighted match in the other, she commenced pouring the coal oil, and by the time the lamp was full the match was nearly out, so she hurriedly applied it to the lamp, in doing which the coal oil gas ignited with a loud report, startling the people in the house and in the neighborhood. The young men—one of them burned in the face—left as rapidly as possible, and ran down the street as fast as they could go. The neighbors rushed out of doors, believing that an emute had commenced in the street, and that the report was that of a pistol, but they understood from whence the report came when they saw the brilliant light in Mr. Wheeler's basement. One gentleman without coat or hat, rushed in just as Mr. Ludlow—who resides in the house and was engaged at the time in his study—leaped down stairs in his dressing gown and slippers, and tearing off his gown, threw it around the girl, who was moving about, shrieking wildly, a perfect sheet of flame. Mr. Ludlow's garment was destroyed, but the fire was not smothered, it seemed impossible to subdue it.

Mr. Wheeler, who had retired for the night, now came down, when the girl was taken to the kitchen and soused with wet linnen, which was soaking in a wash tub. This extinguished the flames, but the skin of the unfortunate girl had been reduced to a crisp. She was, however, still able to move, and was taken up stairs into the second story and laid on a bed, when her body was dressed with sweet oil and flour until a doctor, who in the mean time had been sent for, arrived. Anodynes were also administered. All efforts to save her were unavailing. She had inhaled the burning gas, and her death followed about four o'clock yesterday morning.

CORRESPONDENCE FROM NOVA SCOTIA.

Dec. 25, 1861

I have stated in a former letter that the census of our province was taken in the spring of this year. The number of inhabitants is reported to be 330,857, being an increase of about twenty per cent. since 1851.

The population is thus divided in a religious point of view:—

Roman Catholics,	86,281
Presbyterian Church of Lower Provinces,	69,456
Baptists,	62,040
Church of England,	47,744
Methodists,	34,055
Church of Scotland,	19,063
Lutherans,	4,362
Congregationalists,	2,183
Universalists,	848
Christian Disciples, and Reformed Baptists,	901
Reformed Presbyterians,	236
Quakers,	158
Evangelical Union,	143
Bible Christians,	112
Sandemanians,	46
Campbellites,	32
Mormons,	27
Swedenborgians,	13
Deists,	3
Other Creeds, not classed,	822
No Creed given,	2,314

The rate of increase during the last ten years varies considerably. The Baptists have increased forty-six per cent.; the Universalists, forty-five; the Methodists, forty-four; the Church of England, thirty; the Presbyterian Church, twenty-eight; the Roman Catholics, twenty-three; the Lutherans, seven; the Church of Scotland, one. The Congregationalists, Sandemanians, and Quakers, have decreased.

Taking the counties separately, the Roman Catholics are the largest religious body in Halifax, Sydney, Guysborough, Inverness, Richmond, C. Breton, and Digby. The aggregate population of these counties is 145,797. The Presbyterian Church of the Lower Provinces has more adherents than other denominations in Colchester, Pictou, Victoria, and Haunts, in which counties the whole population amounts to 78,933. The Baptists are the most numerous sect in King's, Queen's, Annapolis, Yarmouth, and Shelburne, in a population of 70,963. The Church of England exceeds others in Lunenburg, the population of which county is 19,632. The Methodists preponderate in Cumberland, where the population is 19,533.

WANTS DISMISSAL.

The Bruce Herald reports the following, in complaining of the indifference of postmasters, in that county, to their duties:

"As an illustration of our remarks, we may cite a single instance of the ability of some of her Majesty's servants. One of our subscribers went to one of these small offices for his paper, and was told by the postmaster that it hadn't come, as he knew nothing about it. He turned away, but having occasion to enter the kitchen, what was his surprise to find the official's wife calmly reading the paper which should have been handed to him. Had he not made the discovery, we should, no doubt, have been blamed for gross carelessness in not sending the paper."

—During the severe snow-storm of a week ago last Monday, two children, named Shuttle, while on their way to school, about fifteen miles back of Brockville, were frozen to death.

CANADIAN LOYALTY.

The reference made to the loyalty of Canada in the Queen's speech and in the British Parliament has been very agreeable to us. The various speakers in referring to it regard it as a spontaneous expression of our attachment to the Father Land. They viewed the cause which elicited that attachment as one, properly speaking, belonging to Britain—Canadians not being, so to speak, personally interested in the quarrel generated by the Trent outrage, might have looked on until hostilities had commenced, or likely to commence, before taking an active part in preparations to defend their country. So far from this, if an insult had been offered to ourselves, we could not have felt more determined to resent it than we did to resent that offered to the British people. The patriotism of a people was never more clearly shown. From Gaspe to Sarnia there seemed to be but one feeling, and that was, that a wanton insult having been offered to the "dear old flag" that for a "thousand years has braved the battle and the breeze," restitution must be made for that insult, or the people committing it will be made to feel the consequences. Britons and Canadians—one and the same people—will not and cannot brook that that flag which floats over them should be dishonored. There was no fear of consequences from our exposed position, or from the fact that our soil in the event of a rupture would be the battle field. A determination, as unanimous as it was spontaneous, was both felt and expressed, that Canada should not be behind in meeting the consequences of a refusal to make reparation for the wrong done. While we, therefore, feel pleased to find that our loyalty has been duly appreciated at home, at the same time we are satisfied there has been no over-estimate of it made. We have simply had justice done us at home—a right we have not always enjoyed—a right, too, that if certain politicians and newspapers amongst us were to be believed only last summer, we should not now have had.

It has been an old cry with a party in this Province, and it reaches back to the time when the present Anglican Bishop of Toronto was Rector of York U. C. And strange to say that it should after having been hushed for a long time back be revived at the last general election, by dishonest, time-serving politicians, to serve their base purposes. Such discreditable and wicked attempts, however, always will, in the long run, injure the cause which they are intended to advance. When Rev. John Strachan went to England in 1827, he represented to the Government and British people that the only loyal people in this Province were members of the Church of England—the Methodists and Baptist forming, as he stated, a large portion of the remaining inhabitants of U. C., were disloyal, and he arrived at this conclusion—as he did at many others in the wonderful lying ecclesiastical Chart which he exhibited to British eyes—by guessing. He told his auditors that the Methodist and Baptist people here having many of their preachers from the United States, it followed as a consequence that the people could not be loyal! Strange as it may now sound such a wanton libeller, such a false charge, was believed in England—and the wily but wicked priest obtained what he went for, and what all these false charges were made for—the Charter of King's College. It would be profitable for many Methodists now-a-days to study Canadian history, especially that part of it relating to themselves and the many tergiversations of some of their leading men. If the present Bishop of Toronto had been dead last summer we should have said that his mantle had fallen on the Rev. Wm. Ryerson the member elect for West Brant. That poor old man told the people when soliciting their suffrages that the one thing needful in Canada "was a good sound British education," and he went to Parliament to assist them in obtaining it. Just like his "father" who went to England to obtain Kings College to make Canadian youths loyal. We have, again, a body of our people who boast in being known as the "Moderates," a cognomen to designate Tories and renegade Reformers—who, for want of a better cry to carry their point at the polls, charged their opponents with disloyalty. A more wanton insult was never offered in Canada since the time referred to above, nor charges more false. And these have been made by great men and small—from the Minister of Militia to the Serjeant of the Peterboro' Rifle Corps—from the Editor of the Leader to the editor of the Peterborough Review. Strange how these men have changed. There is not a word about disloyalty now! They say, "This is all changed now;" yes, but who are changed, the former "lookers to Washington" or their vile defamers? We say emphatically the latter.—Such reckless, impudent scribblers as the editor of the Review, who sits down and calls men infinitely his superiors in everything but his impertinence "brazen-faced annexationists," and impugns the loyalty of men who were free born, and whose loyalty is an inbred principle. The miserable class of time-servers who, for a consideration, will box the political compass, are held at their real value, and one feels glad that such opportunities as the Trent affair now and again occur in order that such contemptible men may get caught, and their utter want of principle become transparent. The party of whom we speak have all along been the "troublers of Israel." In 1849 by their representations they led the American people to suppose that annexation would most assuredly take place. In 1861 by similar representations they have again deceived that people, and now boast that we are a unit to repel their insults or their invasions. Loyalty in Canadians is an instinct—so to speak. They cannot help being loyal, and may the day be far distant when any other flag than that which now waves over us shall be seen. Justice though long denied has at length been meeted out to a maligned people, and the defamers have been forced by public opinion both at home and here to eat their leek, and now occupy the unenviable position of false accusers.

HO! FOR CARIBOO!

This is as much the cry now as Fraser River and Pike's Peak were a year ago. Large numbers of persons are leaving the United States and Canada for "the diggin's." Indeed, we have a small party preparing, and on the eve of starting, in our very midst. No less than a dozen men, well known in our Town, will, we understand, be on the road to Cariboo in a few days. We wish them a hearty God-speed and good luck. We confess we are somewhat prejudiced against sudden rushes into new countries, especially when the gold excitement is the incentive; but all from the accounts we have seen, there is nothing to discourage any one who may wish to change his fortune in British Columbia. As we know very many are anxious to have information concerning the country and the diggings, the best route thereto, &c., we will publish from time to time such information as we consider reliable. The Montreal Advertiser makes the following extract from a letter recently received by a gentleman of that city from his brother at Victoria, Vancouver's Island. The statements relative to the richness of the gold mines are entirely reliable:

"You no doubt have heard of the richness of the gold mines of a district of the Frazer River called Cariboo, which are considered the richest yet discovered in the world. The largest lump of pure gold was seven pounds. But all the gold there is coarse. I have by me a specimen weighing five ounces. The best day's work done by the labor of one man was 560 ounces.—They cannot mine more than three or four months in the year. The best work of the various companies was by four men, who brought down the Frazer to Victoria, as their summer's work, 5,000 ounces. Three others, Frenchmen, brought down 7,825 ounces. Three others, 5,600 ounces. I have seen many of the large specimens and many a large bag of the small specimens. There are only about 3,000 miners in the country, most of whom have done well. This, I think, exceeds the gold mines of California or Australia. Our little town of Victoria is very lively. A great many of the miners have come here to spend their winter, and to spend their money.—About half the population is composed of portions of various tribes of Indians, who, with the variegated and gay colors of their dress, give the streets a lively appearance. No less than four government officials have been defaulters here. First, the cashier in the Custom House, who was fined $1,000 and imprisoned twelve months; next the Postmaster who escaped to California; the next, the Harbour-master, who had friends to back him and paid up, but lost his situation; the other day the Treasurer, who, with his Clerk, is now in prison waiting trial at the next assizes; and what is more remarkable, all these men have families, and moved in the best circles of society."

On the point of route a correspondent of the Daily Globe offers a few observations, which we copy:

"The San Francisco route is too expensive for the majority of the parties likely to embark in this enterprise. The St. Paul's route is also expensive, tedious, roundabout and not desirable for Canadians or British subjects. Let us examine what difficulties stand between Toronto and Red River, provided the Government will put on a single steamer to Fort William or Grand Portage forthwith. Four days from Toronto to Fort William at $12, the late fare of the Rescue. From Fort William or Grand Portage are the old established and well known routes. The Grand Portage, in the present state of Fort William, will be found the most comfortable and the easiest. Either route can be travelled in 16 days. For eight or ten passengers and two guides, the expense of canoe and guides, say $80. Provisions for 10 men and two guides to return, say $100, (the large canoe can be sold to advantage, and a small one found for the return of the guides.) Total, $192, or say $200, to a party of ten, paddling their own canoe (in the same way Mr. Jessepp, of the Oshawa Vindicator, and party, speedily and successfully made the journey in 1858, via the Winnipeg,) expenses to each $20, time 20 days.

A correspondent "R. L." writes to the Toronto Leader as follows:

"As I intend to go as soon as the spring will admit of it, I thought you would not deem it imprudent on my part to lay before those desiring information a statement of the route. The route I propose to take is from Collingwood to Chicago, from thence to Omaha City on the Mississippi river, and then to follow the Platt River to the south Pass in the Rocky Mountains, and from thence to the head waters of Salmon river, a distance of about 250 or 300 miles, there to commence prospecting. I propose to start about the 10th of April and purchase our outfit at Omaha City, the cost of which would be as follows: Three yoke of cattle at $60 each, $180; 1 wagon at $60; 16 cwt of flour at $2, $32; 2 cwt of hard bread at $3, $6; 6 cwt of bacon at $10, $60; groceries, $30; tools and cooking utensils, $15; shoeing oxen, $6; tent, $8; passage for four persons from Toronto to Omaha City, $48. Total cost for four persons, $445. By this estimate you will see that I have calculated the cost for four persons, which amounts to a trifle over $100 each, and they would also have three months' provisions after they got there, and three oxen besides, which would be no small object. The distance from Omaha City to the South Pass is about 800 miles, and from there to Salmon River about 300 miles. Time of travelling about 60 days. I have travelled over the plains as far as the Rocky Mountains, and I know by experience that oxen are the best animals to travel that route with. As for prospecting and mining operations I am perfectly well acquainted with them. The road is good enough to the South Pass to carry 40 cwt on one wagon. The principal objections I have to the Red River route are these: 1st. It is so far north that parties cannot start until it is late in the spring, on account of the grass for their ponies. 2nd. The route is much further than the one I propose, and the Indians more hostile. 3rd. The outfit will cost more than by my route, and I do not like the idea of travelling with ponies, as the Indians are apt to steal them, and should they be so fortunate as to get safe through with them, they cannot eat them. 4th. When they get there they will be short of provisions."

A QUEER MORCEAU.

We find the following item in the Quebec correspondence of the Cornwall Freeholder. Either the writer is not "posted", or Mr. Cauger and his friends in Quebec very much mistake the stuff Colonel Haultain is of. We give the item for what it is worth:

"Mr. Cauger, the defeated of Peterborough, made his appearance here on last Saturday. And for what purpose think you? For the no less discreditable one than that of enabling ministers to coerce Mr. Haultain into supporting them, by presenting to that gentleman, in terrorem, an ugly alternative, should he not be consenting, of a contestation of his hard won seat! The screws are to be applied in the same manner to several other members whose seats are subject to contestation."

NAVIGATION OF THE ST. LAWRENCE IN WINTER.

We have in vain for many years attempted to draw the attention of the Government and the people of Canada to the practicability of navigation on the Lower St. Lawrence during the winter months. But the prejudices and superstitions of our people on this matter have hitherto been stubbornly maintained, and, probably will be for some time unless aid comes from without. We copy from an Irish paper the following sensible remarks on the subject, and would suggest that either the Canadian Government or the Commander of the Forces would take steps to lay the matter before the British Admiral on the North American Station, who might be induced to employ one or more of the fine Propellers now at Halifax or Bermuda to solve the question of the navigability of our river in winter. Surely the men who have combatted successfully the difficulties of Artic navigation will find nothing formidable in the St. Lawrence even should the dangers be such as the most timid and prejudiced of our own people declared them to be. If were of the utmost importance to this country that the point should be decided either one way or the other, as opinions are greatly divided on the question. Should the river be found navigable, as the Quebec pilots insist, during January and February, the discovery would be more valuable to Canada than that of a golden region, such as California or Fraser's River. A winter port of our own would make us independent of the United States, which a railroad to Halifax never will:—

"The St. Lawrence Route.—The practicability of landing troops in the St. Lawrence was proved by the despatch of the regiment from Bic to Montreal in two days, without any sufferings, but the Persia had to leave from want of a harbour. Now, a commission should be appointed to choose the best port to which the Grand Trunk could be extended in the St. Lawrence, as a packet station in winter, as well as for our troop ships and men-of-war. Of this the mayors of Montreal and Quebec, the presidents of the Boards of Trade of those cities, and the president of the St. Lawrence Harbour Board, should be ex-officio members, the Imperial and Canadian governments naming two gentlemen, well qualified, as the acting members. The River St. Lawrence, like the Chesapeake at Philadelphia, the rivers at Washington, Baltimore, and the Hudson at New York, is much obstructed by ice for 80 miles below Quebec, but at Bic these obstructions could be rendered nugatory by adopting proper means. Our grandsires were afraid of the dangers of the "Bay of Biscay O," as the old song says, and our fathers of doubling Cape Horn, all of which on trial disappeared. Last century about 20 vessels annually went round Cape Horn, now about 1,600; so will it be with those of the Gulf of St. Lawerence in the winter, provided it be properly lit, with Pilots and steam pilot-boats. Lately two of the finest and fastest sailing steamers in the world—the Isaac Newton and New World—were frozen up on a passage between Albany and New York, though their speed was 23 miles per hour, but the ice ceasing next day they were got into safety. The Vanderbilt steamer, at New York, was dragged from her moorings by ice. We state these facts to show that the St. Lawrence is not the only river in which there are dangers from floating ice, and that gales are as frequent in the Bay of Fundy and off Cape Hatteras as in the much dreaded gulf. We trust the Admiralty will at once appoint a commission. Fifty miles of rail to Bic can be extended much cheaper than 300 to St. John (N. B.) or 400 to Halifax. The speculation would not pay a commercial company, but whatever line is chosen will have to be made by the government.

The Shipping and Mercantile Gazette of Saturday has a letter from 20 Captains and Pilots of Quebec, who know the St. Lawrence practically, stating that at Bic it is safe at all seasons; while it contains a letter from Capt. M'Lea, who lost his ship, that it is not. The latter gentleman's evidence must be take cum grano salis, as exculpating himself.—Dublin Evening Journal.

Fire.—A barn, stable, and several outhouses, belonging to Mr. George Esson, Otonabee, were destroyed by fire on Friday night last. One fine horse perished in the flames. Loss about $1,500, insured for $600.

A man named Dennis O'Brien, who was employed on the farm, performed a noble act. A hole had to be cut through the back part of the stable to get out the horses, the fire having reached the front of the building. Three of the horses were got out safely. The stable was by this time completely enveloped in the flames, and Mr. Esson jumped from the building, calling on O'Brien to follow, but having a great attachment to the remaining horse (a fine brood mare), he being the driver of the same, he forced back when partly out and at the risk of his own life, rushed through the flames and made a last desperate effort to rescue the unfortunate brute, but to no purpose.

Such an act proves more than ordinary bravery and sympathy in a man.

The health of Prince Napoleon has been much worse than was given out, and great fears were at one time entertained. He was very delirious, and a brain fever was expected to set in. He is, however, much better.—'Court Journal.'

—About thirty or forty men and women were assembled at a "wake" in a house in Strong's Court, Gregg's Lane, Dublin, on Sunday morning, when the floor gave way, and corpse and "wakers" were precipitated into the cellar below. No serious personal injury was sustained.

—The death of Boucher, once the Paganini of the violin in Paris, has lately been announced in his 85th year. He was, in his time, said to be remarkable for his likeness to the Emperor Napoleon, but latterly no resemblance was visible. He was to the last an active lover of his art, and almost a constant attendant at every concert. Whenever a distinguished professor appeared, the venerable musician was remarkable for the warmth of his felicitations, and it was often with difficulty that executants, vocal or instrumental, could escape the ardor of his enthusiastic embraces before an entire auditory.

—Surely the greatest science in the present business days is that of advertising.—Here is a chance for the enterprising. The first edition of the Shilling Catalogue for the International Exhibition is to be made up to £250,000, with 50 advertising pages, a £200 advertising page next to the type, and a £1,000 advertising back page of cover. This last page is said to have been secured by Mr. John Bennet the watchmaker of Cheapside.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Columbus, Ky., March 4, via Cairo, March 5.

The evacuation of Columbus commenced on Thursday, and the last of the rebels did not leave until yesterday afternoon. The burning commenced on Friday and was continued until Monday. Many portions of their barracks and other quarters are still on fire. The fortifications were not molested. Everything they could not carry off was fired or thrown into the river. A large number of cannon were thrown into the river.

Lieut-Col. Hogg, of the 2nd Illinois cavalry with 250 men, went into the works at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Our transports and gunboats reached there at 8 o'clock to-day, not knowing that the place was evacuated.

A man representing himself as a Unionist says that the rebels have mined portions of the work, and thinks that they may be blown up yet. But few people remain at Columbus. There were 19,000 troops. They left Columbus on transports and by railroad. The track and bridges were torn up and burned for six miles. What their further destination is is not yet known. It is reported that Gen. Polk and his officers had become unpopular, because they had done nothing but fortify the town. The men had become demoralized and reckless, and feared that they would be surrounded and shelled out.

The ex-Mayor of Columbus is suspected of treason to the Confederate Government and was carried off by the rebels. The works are very extensive, and are probably four miles in extent. Every prominent bluff on the river and around the town is fortified.

The Herald prints the following:

Charleston, Va., March 5.

"Last night a squad of the 1st Michigan cavalry advanced as far as Perryville, on the Winchester turnpike, ambushed and surprised a party of Confederate cavalry, putting three of them hors de combat and routing them."

The Michigan party returned with nine Confederate cavalry horses, fully equipped, as trophies, among them the celebrated black stallion rode by Col. Ashley, without the loss of a man.

The amount of forage and provisions captured by our right wing since the advance in Virginia, is estimated to be worth $20,000. This includes 4,000 pounds of bacon, stored for the use of the Confederate army.

Leetown and Levittsville are now among the places held for the Union up to this time.

The success of the movement on the Upper Potomac has been complete

Gen. Shields passed through Charleston on his way west last night.

Advices from the Lower Potomac state that the Confederates are undoubtedly concentrating a large force in that direction opposite to the position of Gen. Hooker's division.

There is reason to believe also that the Confederate army of the Potomac has been greatly augmented since the recent Union victories in the west. They have here their strongest defensive works and the flower of their army. Their defeat here will close the rebellion and leave nothing to be done by the Union forces, except to move forward and occupy the seceeded states, and afford protection to the Union men there until they can organize new state governments under the auspices of loyalty.

Washington, March 9—7 p. m.

By telegraph from Fortress Monroe:—The Ericsson arrived at Fortress Monroe last night. Early this morning she was attacked by three vessels—the Merrimac, the Jamestown, and the Yorktown. After five hours' contest they were driven off—the Merrimac is in a sinking condition. The above is official.

Louisville, March 10.

An intelligent gentleman from Memphis, on Wednesday last, reports the citizens generally alarmed, and relying on Forts Pillow and Randolph for defence. There were very few troops at Memphis.

The Legislature had scattered, after several ineffectual attempts to transact business.

Gov Harris was greatly excited and flying about from one Southern point to another with little prospect of succeeding in his efforts to rally the people to his aid.

Washington, March 10.

It is rumoured and believed here that the Confederate army is retreating from Centreville and Manassas.

Lieutenant Wise, commanding the Potomac flotilla, in his official report to the Navy Department, confirms the report of the abandonment of the Confederate batteries at Cockpit Shipping, and also the burning of the Page and other Confederate crafts.

Very Latest.

The Confederates have retreated in force from Manassas! The Federals have advanced to occupy their position! The Rebels are on the retreat to parts unknown. Another great victory has been won for the Federals in Arkansas! Brunswick, Ga., has been taken by the Federals! Fernandi has also been captured!!

DETAILS OF THE OCCUPATION OF CHARLESTON, VIRGINIA.

Shortly after the occupation of Charleston, Gen. McClellan and staff made their appearance, being greeted by the soldiers with the most vociferous cheers and the greatest enthusiasm. The party extended their trip beyond the town. Very few residents remained, not more than a half-dozen males being visible, although women and children were more abundant, showing that the enemy had faith in our willingness to protect non-combatants. The houses were occupied by our soldiers immediately upon their arrival, and although in many cases the windows and doors had been destroyed, they afforded better protection than the canvas tents. Fires were kindled in the fireplaces, heaps of wood gathered from fences and frame structures were collected, and in the evening the rations were distributed to men, who, however, tired and hungry, had at least a roof over their heads and a cheerful blaze at their feet.

Accomodations were found for all of the regiments, the officers taking possession of some of the tenements in which the furniture had been left. A story went the rounds rather to the discredit of a Western Regiment. They were quartered comfortably, when (as the story goes) three of the men undertook to play a national air upon a very valuable piano, using their feet, however, instead of their fingers. As a sequel, the informant states that the whole regiment was compelled to turn out and take to their tents, not being entrusted proper boarders for houses having pianos. It must be said for the honour of all concerned, that private property has not been wantonly destroyed, and that in all cases depredations have been properly punished.

About seventy-five miles from Baltimore on the line of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, and on the North bank of the Potomac river, is Berlin. It is a small scattered settlement of no particular importance. While passing this place on Friday morning last a train was shelled by the rebels.

The federal picke'ts are stationed at short intervals on the North bank of the Potomac. They have erected houses of boards, logs and clay, and obtain sufficient protection from the cold winds which sweep the valley. It is but seldom that the enemy appears upon the opposite bank, and never in force.

The Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road Company have now all their roads in use, except forty-two miles between Hancock and Harper's Ferry. The condition of the road between these points is not known, but it is believed that the rebels have torn up the cross-ties, as well as iron rails, and have destroyed bridges and aqueducts. The advance of the right wing of the army will once again place the work in the hands of its owners. The intervening country has been a hot-bed of secession, Berkeley county, of which Martinsburg is the county seat, having liberally contributed men, money and provision to the Southern cause. The track is laid close to the river bank, which is nearly level. The opposite shore, well wooded, consists of a series of undulating eminences. Down the valley, between two of these, the enemy managed to bring a gun, and, as a freight train was on the way from Sandy Hook to Baltimore, threw about fifteen shells in rapid succession. Very few of the missiles exploded and no injury was done to the cars, although one heavy iron shell fell within fifty feet of the engine. The train was occupied only by the conductor and brakeman, having conveyed a regiment to Sandy Hook, and being on the return. The engineer put on the steam, but having a great number of cars could not move very rapidly. The affair was evidently intended as a piece of impudence, being within sight of our pickets, and almost within hearing of Sandy Hook. The gun was brought down through the narrow valley by a squad of rebels, headed by one officer, and after the train passed beyond its reach was withdrawn, and taken back into the forest. About two hours after this occurrence the regular passenger train from Baltimore to Harper's Ferry passed along, proceeding cautiously and making no halt at Berlin. No sight of the rebels was apparent, and there is no probability that the manœuvre will be repeated. The river at the point where this occurred is about one-third of a mile in width, with a rapid current.

THE RECENT CASE OF BODY SNATCHING.

We translate the following from Le Pays:—We stated last week that some bodies had been stolen from the vault of the parish of St. Constant, in which several medical students had introduced themselves by making an opening four feet square in a wall four feet thick, with the crowbar. A search-warrant was issued on Tuesday, on the deposition of the carter who conveyed the students on the occasion; but notwithstanding the consentaneous efforts of the police to recover the bodies, they could not be found. The body of a man was found on the dissecting table of the McGill College Medical School, and one of the persons who had laid the information, and whose father died at the age of 85 years, thought he recognized it; but the absence of teeth in the mouth of the deceased, threw a doubt on the statement, and

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE "CANADA."

Halifax, March 5.

The Canada arrived here to-day with Liverpool dates of the 22nd, via Queenstown 23rd. The Bavaria and Africa from New York had arrived out.

The Liverpool cotton market was firm on Saturday; sales 8,000 bales. Breadstuffs dull. Provisions downward. Consols 93¼ for money.

Lord Palmerston stated in the House of Lords that the negotiations relative to the San Juan affair had been suspended in consequence of the civil war in America, but a joint provisional occupation of the Island had been arranged by both governments.

It is reported that Mr. Slidell has had several interviews with all the French ministers, but they were of course of an unofficial nature.

The Grecian insurrection continues, but is confined to Nauplia.

The anniversary of Washington's birthday was duly and patriotically celebrated in the Free-Mason's tavern, London. The Bishop of Ohio presided. Minister Adams responded to the toast, "Memory of Washington."

The British government have refused to produce any information relative to British vessels running the American blockade.

FURTHER BY THE "CANADA."

Halifax, March 5.

The Canada from Liverpool on the 22nd via Queenston on the 23rd, arrived here at 10:20 this a. m., with 56 passengers for Boston. The City of Washington from New York reached Liverpool at 5:30 a. m. on the 21st.

The Anglo-Saxon from Portland at noon on the 21st.

The Canada reports fine weather on her passage.

The Liverpool, New York and Philadelphia Steamship Companies are building a new steamship to be called the City of London, to be equal or superior to the City of Manchester.

Captain Walker Patton, of Liverpool, has been appointed commander of the Great Eastern.

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Commons, on the 20th inst., Mr. O'Donoghue moved for a return of British vessels, and their captains and owners respectively, that have succeeded in running the American blockade. Also, for similar returns of British vessels captured or destroyed in attempting to break the blockade, and returning of the number of British vessels that have put into Jushua and other colonial ports with contrabands of war and supplies for the Confederate States, and that have been permitted to refit and supply themselves at those places, in contravention of the Queen's proclamation and of neutrality. He strongly censured the Government for not having taken active steps to prevent breaches of neutrality committed by British ships.

Mr. Layard said that it would scarcely be convenient that he should enter into a discussion of the blockade, which would come on more regular when there was a solution of it, of which notice had been moved. He must decline, therefore, to consent to the return for two reasons. In the first place government had not got the information sought for; and in the second place, if they had, it would not be their office to furnish a list of wrong-doers and violators of the law. The papers relative to the blockade would probably be laid on the table on the 24th or 25th instant, and would contain a statement of the number of vessels which had broke the blockade, and perhaps their tonnage, and he hoped the information would satisfy Mr. O'Donoghue.

The Solicitor-General explained the misapprehension of Mr. O'Donoghue, and said that private vessels might carry contraband of war, but at their own risk, and if detected they must abide the consequences.

Mr. C. Hornatyn confirmed the recent reports of the successful gold mining in British Columbia.

In the House of Lords, on the 21st ult., Earl de Grey, explained the reason why the Government had appointed Lord Clyde to the command of the volunteers at the approaching field-day at Brighton. He said it was to prevent jealousies arising among volunteer officers.

In the House of Commons on the same evening, Mr. Scully gave notice that he intended calling the attention of the House to the expediency of establishing a more improved steam communication between North America and Ireland.

Lord Palmerston, in reply to Mr. Halliburton, said that negotiations with the American Government relative to the Island of San Juan were suspended in consequence of the civil war. Arrangements were, however, being made that there should be a provisional joint occupation.

Mr. Maguire called the attention of the House to the serious distress at present existing in Ireland.

Sir Robert Peel, in reply, refuted his assertions, in the course of his remarks, said that no more remarkable proof of absence grievances existed than that which occurred the other day, when there was danger of a rupture with America. Ireland was full of American emissaries trying to raise up a spirit of disloyalty, and a meeting was held in Dublin, at which a few manniken traitors had tried to unite the cabbage garden heroes of '48, but had met with no response. Not a single man of respectability throughout the country answered the appeal made to them; and why? because Ireland, at the present time, was very different from Ireland of the past.

In reply to a question on Italian affairs, Lord Palmerston said he believed that there was a strong desire that Rome should be the capital of Italy, and that the Pope's temporal power should cease. The British Government, however, had taken no part in the expression of opinion, and no instructions had been given to Sir Jas. Hudson to make any remonstrance on the subject at Turin.

It was stated that the army estimates were likely to show a saving of about one million pounds sterling, arising chiefly out of payment for troops in India. In Canada the regiments are to be of the full strength of 1,027.

An influential deputation from the cotton manufacturing districts had an interview with Lord Palmerston and Sir Chas. Wood relative to the tariff on goods in India, and petitioned for a redress of the hardships arising from their tariff.

Lord Palmerston, in reply, said that the Government felt the greatest regret at the greatest distress, but could not think it due to one cause only.

Sir Charles Wood said that the tax was not intended as a protective one, but originated in a financial necessity. The Indian Government had already reduced the duty on yarns, and hoped soon to do the same on manufactured goods, but the Government could not promise to do so at once.

LIVERPOOL BREADSTUFFS MARKET.

The market is generally very dull; the usual authorities quote as follows:—Flour declined 6d per bbl quoted at 22s 6d to 31s. Wheat very dull and declined 1d to 2d; red western 10s 7d to 12s; red southern 12s to 12s 3d; white western 12s 6d to 12s 9d; white southern 12s 9d to 13s. Corn quiet and declined 3d per quarter; mixed 29s 9d to 30s; white 34s to 37s.

Pork has a declining tendency. Lard 42s to 43s. Ashes dull at 33s 6d to 34s. Sugar firmer.

LONDON MARKETS.

Sugar has an upward tendency. Tea firm. Consols closed on Friday evening at 93¼ to 93¾ for money.

The bullion in Bank had decreased during the week £148,000.

FURTHER BY THE NORWEGIAN.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Parliamentary proceedings on the 19th were unimportant.

The Irish Times says Sir Robert Peel was reported to have said, in response to some inquiries relative to the Galway Line, that when the Company was prepared to perform their part of the contract the Government would perform theirs.

The Moniteur says that the Government of the Emperor has requested information at Rome, respecting the pastoral letter convoking all Bishops to Rome, for the canonization of martyrs, the letter having been published in France without having been previously communicated to the Government. Cardinal Antonelli replied that the invitation was simply a friendly one, and not obligatory in character, only intended to give weight to the religious ceremony. On this reply the French Government expressed the wish that the Bishops should call them to Rome.

The new Italian Loan was announced at London on the 10th inst.

Baron Ricasoli stated in Parliament that the Government had no intention to send ships to reinforce the Mexican Expedition, but merely considered it advisable to send a few frigates to the Colonies to protect the Italian subjects.

Liverpool, Feb. 21.—It is reported that insurances are daily effected on ships and cargoes to run the blockade of Southern ports. The highest premium paid is fifteen guineas, and ships are entitled to select any port. Nearly all the vessels insured are steamers of 1,500 tons.

The telegraph from the Red Sea to London is now open.

The Warrior is ordered from Gibraltar to Portsmouth.

Madrid, Feb. 20.—The Journal Espana demands a monarchy for Peru by universal suffrage.

Rome, Feb. 20.—The police have made several arrests. A proclamation of the National Committee has been secretly posted up here.

It is believed that Napoleon has given assurances to the Pope that the French troops will not leave Rome.

Berlin, Feb. 20.—The division between Prussia and Austria is continually widening. Agitation in Germany is increasing.

Vienna, Feb. 21.—It is rumoured that Maximilian will leave for Paris and London towards the end of February.

Paris, Feb. 21.—It is believed that the speech of Prince Napoleon on the address of the Senate, will express the real policy of Napoleon on the Italian question.

The Tuscarora left Gibraltar on the 18 h for Spanish waters, off Algeria. She had been watching the Sumter, which still remained at Gibraltar.

In the Commons on the 17th, Supplementary Estimates for naval and military expenditure in the Trent affair (973,000) were moved and unanimously agreed to. In the debate on the subject, Mr. Bright strongly denounced the policy of the Government. He said the money had been worse than thrown away. The threatening menaces had been quite uncalled for, and gave Earl Russell's first dispatch, which he said had more the appearance of a declaration of war than a courteous demand for a just object to which America could not fail to accede. He refuted the idea that the American Government was influenced by a mob, and argued that the interest of England was so bound up with America that it was, in every respect, unadvisable to inflict a sting that it might take centuries to remove. Mr Baker endorsed the tone of the Government, but condemned the tone of the press. Lord Palmerston defended the ministers, and said Mr. Bright's opinions were confined to himself. He contended that there was every reason to justify England in backing up her demands in the manner she did, as the course of the American Government clearly showed that they did not at an earlier stage of the affair regard the act as one they ought to disavow. There were doubts whether England's demands would be complied with, and certainly the people were not prepared to meet with a refusal. He pointed to the eulogies showered on Captain Wilkes, and said that the British Government, with these facts before them, would have deserved condemnation, as they had not taken steps to enforce their demands. He thought the course taken deserved commendation, and believed it was calculated to ensure the continuation of peace.

The parliamentary proceedings have been enlivened by a challenge from the O'Donohue to Sir Robert Peel, for the expressions of the latter, which the former considered personally offensive. Lord Palmerston got scent of the affair and warned Sir Robert Peel against making himself a party to a breach of privilege, and brought the affair to the notice of the House.

The O'Donohue apologised to the House, but made some sarcastic remarks in relation to Sir Robert Peel.

also cures GOUT AND DYSPEPSIA, in all their forms. It is now giving relief to thousands who have been suffering form these diseases, and who have tried all other remedies in vain.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

has received the highest testimonials from the highest sources in regard to its wonderful efficacy. It operates with equal success in mild and chronic cases, never failing to work out a speedy and permanent cure.

WATSON'S NEURALGIA KING

costs but one dollar a bottle, and less than a bottle often effects the end desired.

PROTECTION TO LIFE AND PROPERTY.

200,000 Feet

OF THE NEW PATENT ENGLISH ELECTRO-GALVANIZED, ANNEALED AND CARBONIZED

LIGHTNING RODS

JUST ARRIVED FROM ENGLAND, WITH

SPRATTS' RENOWNED

PLATINA TIPPED POINT!!

AND ENLARGED

INSULATORS & ATTACHMENTS.

THIS ROD is prepared in England with especial reference to its great conducting powers; is highly approved and recommended by the best authorities. The white non-corroding surface prevents rust, and greatly increases its conducting power, completely obviating the great objections to the old rod Professor Croft has a Spiral Copper Rod removed from the University Buildings, Toronto, and substituted this, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and not being liable to rust. One real advantage gained by the non conducting qualities of this rod, with Spratt's point, arises from the fact that it constantly receives and silently conducts to the earth, the positive electricity of the surrounding atmosphere generated by an approaching thunder cloud surcharged with this element of destruction and death, thereby drawing off, draining and lessening the fountain, easing the cloud of its constant accumulation, allowing it to pass over our heads in safety, which might otherwise have burst upon us in all its fury. But if it fall in this by reason of too great accumulation of electricity, and the discharge takes place, it conducts all safely to the ground, being a preventative in most cases and a cure in an emergency. We have erected them on the Crystal Palace, and Custom House, at Hamilton, as well as many of the best buildings in this city. By importing largely for cash, we are enabled to erect them at a trifling advance upon the Carbonized Rod. Common iron Rods, such as are being offered by parties from the States we do not erect, as we consider them nearly useless. Good Rods, properly erected, protect 25 feet from the point.

Orders sent to our address from the principal cities of C. W., will be attended to by U. R. Kendall in person, without extra charge. We submit two of our numerous certificates.

PIPER & KINDALL,

Toronto, Sept. 15, 1860.

I HEREBY CERTIFY, THAT I HAVE SUPERintended the erection of Galvanized Iron Rods on the University Buildings, at Toronto, preferring the Galvanized Iron to ordinary Iron Rods, on account of the perfect conducting power of the surface, and from their not being liable to rust.

The advantage resulting from these qualities is more than commensurate with the increased cost.

PETERBORO', July 29th, 1861.

The agents for the firm of Piper & Kendall, Toronto, have put me up two of their Galvanized Lightning Rods so highly recommended by Professor Croft. I consider them preferable to all others. The improved Attachments and Insulators, with Spratt's Platina Tipped Point must give them great additional security.

J. BROWNE, M. D.

I entirely concur in Dr. Browne's observations,—Also have bought two of the same Rods for my two cottages on Brock Street.

JUDSON'S

Mountain Herb Pills.

ABOVE we present you with a perfect likeness of Tecuco, a chief of a tribe of the strange Aztec Nation, that once ruled Mexico. You will find a full account of him and his people in our Pamphlets and Almanacs—to be had gratis, from the Agents for these Pills

The inventor and manufacturer of "Judson's Mountain Herb Pills" has spent the greater part of his life in traveling, having visited nearly every country in the world. He spent over six years among the Indians of the Rocky Mountains and of Mexico, and it was then that the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS" were discovered. A very interesting account of his adventures there, you will find in our Almanac and Pamphlet.

It is an established fact, that all Diseases arise from

IMPURE BLOOD!

The blood is the life! and when any foreign or unhealthy matter gets mixed with it, it is at once distributed to every organ of the body. Every nerve feels the poison, and all the vital organs quickly complain. The stomach will not digest the food perfectly. The liver ceases to secrete a sufficiency of bile. The action of the heart is weakened, and so the circulation is feeble. The lungs become clogged with the poisonous matter; hence, a cough—all from a slight impurity of the fountain-head of life—the Blood! As if you had thrown some earth, for instance, in a pure spring, from which ran a tiny rivulet, in a few minutes the whole course of the stream becomes disturbed and discolored. As quickly does impure blood fly to every part, and leave its sting behind. All the passages become obstructed, and unless the obstruction is removed, the lamp of life soon dies out.

These pills not only purify the blood, but regenerate all the secretions of the body; they are, therefore, unrivalled as a

CURE FOR BILIOUS DISEASES,

Liver Complaint, Sick Headache, &c. This Anti-Bilious Medicine expels from the blood the hidden seeds of disease, and renders all the fluids and secretions pure and fluent, clearing and reinvigorating the vital organs.

Pleasant indeed, is it to us, that we are able to place within your reach a medicine like the "MOUNTAIN HERB PILLS," that will pass directly to the afflicted parts, through the blood and fluids of the body, and cause the sufferer to brighten with the flush of beauty and health.

Judson's Pills are the Best Remedy in existence for the following Complaints:

☞ The Plants and Herbs of which these Pills are made, were discovered in a very surprising way among the Tecuscos, a tribe of Aborigines in Mexico. Get the Almanacs of our Agent, and you will read with delight, the very interesting account it contains of the "GREAT MEDICINE" of the Aztecs.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

A compound remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from Strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure must prove of immense service to this large class of our afflicted fellow-citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases to be found of the following complaints:—

SCROFULA AND SCROFULOUS COMPLAINTS, ERUPTIONS AND ERUPTIVE DISEASES, ULCERS, PIMPLES, BLOTCHES, TUMORS, SALT RHEUM, SCALD HEAD, SYPHILIS AND SYPHILITIC AFFECTIONS, MERCURIAL DISEASE, DROPSY, NEURALGIA OR TIC DOULOUREUX, DEBILITY, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, ERYSIPELAS, ROSE OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which fester in the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sores; cleanse it when you find it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Sooner or later something must go wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or overthrown.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much, the reputation, of accomplishing these ends. But the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not all the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, pretending to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter and painful disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to directions on the bottle.

DR. J. C. AYER & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.
Price, $1 per Bottle; Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

has won for itself such a renown for the cure of every variety of Throat and Lung Complaint, that it is entirely unnecessary for us to recount the evidence of its power, wherever it has been employed. As it has long been in constant use throughout this section, we need not do more than assure the people its quality is kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all it has ever been found to do.

They are sugar-coated, so that the most sensitive can take them pleasantly, and they are the best aperient in the world for all the purposes of a family physic.

It has (with business men generally, and especially with the Merchants of both Provinces) become in great favor, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. Everything Room has been enlarged and made more commodious; there have been completed the new dining room, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences, hitherto unknown to the guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. ON INSCRIBING A NAME ON A BIRCH TREE.

This bark is fragrant fair and white,
Where I've inscribed my name;
Alas! ere long 'twill be defaced
By tempest, storm and rain.
The name, though marr'd, will here exist
Until this bark shall cease to live.

Our hearts though scored by storms of years,
Retains each image still;
And at every touch of memory
Our heart strings vibrate still,
And the impress of friendship will still remain,
Till each dream of life is vanished and gone.

HENRY.

Taking things Cooly.

Some men are never in a hurry. Nothing seems to flurry them—nothing disturbs their equanimity or ruffles their composure.—Though danger threatens and moments are precious, they proceed on their course with a degree of tranquil deliberation that almost reaches the sublime. Whether they are sallying forth to catch the express train and have not a minute to spare, or are waiting for change for a sovereign at the Folkestone Hotel, and hear the melodious bell of the Boulogne steamer just beginning to ring—whether they have been privately warned to draw out their money from a joint-stock bank that intends to stop payment in three quarters of an hour, or have accidentally swallowed an over-dose of opium, and are implored by sympathizing friends to run full speed to the nearest surgeon before coma supervenes—it matters not, they are in no way hurried. They take the thing coolly, as I, somehow or others, are always in time. The fact that they are always in time vindicates them from the charge of apathy, stupidity, or recklessness and clothes them with a dignity which ordinary mortals look up to and admire, but cannot hope to emulate. Other men catch express trains and keep special appointments, and, when stimulated by self-interest, escape time emphatically by the forelock. But then, what an amazing hurry they are in. What a bustle they make, and what a nuisance they are to long-suffering friends and neighbors!

The attitude and bearing of an average Paterfamilias starting with his family on a journey of pleasure or business illustrates this very distinctly. Watch in hand he paces up and down the hall—now giving superfluous instructions to a bewildered footboy, who is striving with perseverance worthy of a better cause to cord a box with a rope a foot too short for the purpose—now, in a voice of querulous despair, shouting exhortations to "make haste" to the family in general—now kicking a favorite dog or cat into infinite space. Now, with a look of savage impatience, he settles the account of some unfortunate tradesmen who had been promised payment a month ago, but having been entirely forgotten ventured to refresh the memory of Paterfamilias before it was too late—now he tumbles bodily over the footboy with the velocity of an unsuccessful acrobat, and an expression of countenance alarming to witness—and finally he seats himself amidst a wilderness of trunks and portmanteaus, like Marius musing or r the ruins of Carthage. Such, very often, is the behavior of an average Paterfamilias going a journey. He is in a prodigious bustle—he is in everybody's way—he worries his estimable wife—he drives his daughters into a temporary state of frenzy—he arrives after all at the station, with three cabsful of family and luggage, half an hour too soon, but finds it rather lucky, in much as in the hurry of departure he has left his purse on the drawing-room table, and all his keys in his dressing-room drawer, and just has time enough to rush home again and fetch them.

The case of a man always in a hurry, but generally too late—always taking extra trouble, but usually coming to grief—always in a whirlwind of bustle, but commonly collapsing in an ignominious blunder—is the more distressing because it so often partakes of the ludicrous. The cool, methodical, self-possessed man, roused by an alarm of fire at the end of the street, tells his servant to wake him when the flames reach No. 30—three doors off,—and turns round to have another nap. So runs the old story. As a contrast, take the anecdote of the fussy, nervous gentleman in Leslie's Recollections, who kept a fire escape—a kind of sack on which he could lower himself from his window in case of emergency.—Being suddenly awakened one night by the sound, as he thought, of the wheels of a fire engine, followed by a tremendous knocking at the door, he descended in his night in great haste, just in time to hand his wife, who had been at the opera, out of her carriage.

For his business-like coolness, commend us to that wonderful Irish squire, who, when his house was attacked admitted his assailants—only a few dozens or so—one by one through the partially opened door, and calmly killed each of them with a kitchen knife the moment the threshold was passed. Again, there is the veteran nobleman at Hounslow Heath. "Have you now my lord," cries a highwayman, clapping a pistol to his lordship's breast, "after all your boasts no king's men should rob you." "Nor should he now, but for that other fellow peeping over your shoulder." The highwayman turns and his lordship blows his brains out. We were always sorry for that highwayman, and are not sure which of the two would have been the greater loss to society. But let that pass. Turn now to another contrast or two. A country clergyman, late one winter's evening, hears a tap at a window-shutter, and, excited by the recollection of a recent burglary and murder, seizes a pistol, rushes to the front door, opens it wildly, stares his eyes, first into the darkness, holds out both the doors, and rushes back to the bosom of his family, little thinking that instead of frightening a burglar, he has killed the benevolent sweetheart. Or take the case of the agitated old bachelor who stopped country dancing to stay ignoring a scream in the garden without doors, taking one pause to himself and getting the door to the parlor maid, with these emphatic instructions, "Mary, I go this way, you go that; and mind you shoot the first man you meet!" which man, very naturally happens to be the luckless wight he before himself.

An English tourist, taking an evening stroll near Naples, was hastily jostled by a stranger in a narrow path. Rogueries were rife, and immediately after search, on putting his hand to his pocket, he missed his watch. The watch is precious, the stranger an insignificant looking man, why should the Englishman accept so impudent a robbery. Off he starts, overtakes the supposed thief, knocks him down, shouts "Watch, watch!" in very imperfect Italian, and severely beats him. The prostrate culprit hurriedly hands out the article demanded, and the Englishman strides away, rejoicing to have recovered his property, and proud of the pluck he has displayed. On reaching his hotel, he enters his bed-room, and behold there is his own watch quietly ticking on the chimney-piece. He has committed, al unconsciously, a flagrant highway robbery, and makes a precipitate flight from Naples to escape the clutches of the police. Some men in critical circumstances will exercise apparent self-possession curiously blended with utter distraction of mind. This may, perhaps, be explained by the supposition that the self-possession is mechanical, the mere result of habit and not an act of the will in the usual sense of the word. Such a form of factitious presence of mind may operate though courage be extinguished, and even reason suspended, by the shock of a sudden peril. The following is an authentic instance. A passenger fell overboard from a sailing-boat in deep water, with a fresh breeze blowing. The boat was instantly put about and the man swam towards it. He was nearly within reach of the outstretched hands of the crew when his hat blew off and floated away. The man coolly turned and swam after it, reached it with difficulty, fixed it firmly on his head, and once more breasted the waves in the direction of the boat. In a few minutes he was laid hold of and safely hoisted on board. No sooner was he there than he thrust his hand into his pockets, and flung first his purse, and then his keys, into the sea, and was going to fling his watch, when the sailors seized his hands. He was for the moment an irresponsible lunatic, and the calm determination not to lose his hat was probably a mere mechanical instinct.

Women often evince abundance of self-possession. In America, passengers by railway are given metal checks or counters for each article of luggage, failing to produce which their luggage will not be returned to them. An English lady travelling in America with a quantity of luggage left her pocket picked in a railway carriage by a man sitting beside her, and her bunch of keys and luggage checks abstracted.—The lady feared to charge the man with the theft, he being the only passenger besides herself in the carriage, and held her peace until the train reached its destination. Then the instant the railway guard put his head into the carriage and asked to see the luggage checks, she quietly pointed to her companion, and said, "that gentleman has mine." The man, wholly taken aback delivered them without a word, and the lady's luggage was saved. We like much the anecdote of the two ladies sketching on the sea shore. "A monster in human form," to use newspaper phraseology, invaded the locality, and stripping off his clothes, commenced disporting himself in the water, exactly in front of the rock where they were sitting. The ladies neither screamed nor ran away, but tranquilly put up their drawing materials, and as soon as the intruder had swum out a convenient distance, seized his "monster a" wearing apparel, and carrying it off, left it at a farm house two miles distant from the shore But perhaps as good an instance of sang froid as could be wished is that of the late Mrs. Burdock, hung for murdering Mrs. Bristol for the sake of her money. Mrs. Burdock, followed by the usual procession of clergyman, sheriff, and other officials, was processing to the place of execution outside the jail where she had been imprisoned. Suddenly the procession comes to a full stop. What is the matter? A slight drizzling rain is falling, and Mrs. Burdock declines to move an inch further without an umbrella. There is no help for it; clergyman and officials, hangman and mob, are kept waiting five minutes, whilst one of the party hastens to the governor's house to borrow the required article and shield Mrs. Burdock from the rain for the remainder of her existence. We remember an abortive case of presence of mind which rather provoked amusement.—An elderly lady of strong mind, living in a picturesque but lonely cottage come on the skirts of the New Forest, rose to her horror three shipwrecked sailors, with the usual paraphernalia of rags, ghastly wounds, and formidable bludgeons, gazing attentively through her drawing-room window. "John—William—James!" exclaims the strong-minded lady, ringing the bell violently and effecting to summon a regiment of attached butlers and footboys. "Ah, you needn't make a noise, ma'am," replied the spokesman of the agreeable little party on the lawn—"we're been round to the back, and their ain't such a thing as a man on the premises." It would be unjust not to add that the visitors presently decamped, satisfied with a half-crown and a basketful of broken victuals.

However much we may admire the cool-headed self-possessed man, it cannot be denied he is often exceedingly aggravating. He stands on a high elevation, and regards his more unexcitable fellow creatures with pity bordering on contempt. Shout with him, and it is he who knocks over all the birds, consoling you when your gun goes off prematurely and prepares the keeper's leg by the good-tempered assurance that he never saw a fellow in such a flurry. Hunt with him, and after the fox found you find yourself in the middle of a brook, whilst your friend, who has never ceased his equable canter, has leapt the latter at a point where it is fordable, and is high and dry on the other side. Shoot with him, and in spite of his cautioning, "Steady, now, for a right and left!" figure with him in front of a cover, and in spite of his warning, "Look out, now, for a hare!" you find yourself in the middle of a shower of shot, and the hare quietly stealing away to your left. Dine with him, and in spite of his warning, "Take care of the bones, now, for there's a dog under the table!" you find a bone in your trowsers' pocket, and your self-possessed friend, full of wonder and mystery, demands if you guess? No! Well I suppose I must tell you—why, he took her daughter out for a sleigh drive—that's all, and——was quite sure of having such an obliging Stage-driver for her son-in-law. Fancy the disappointment.—Hastings Chronicle.

A SLAVE WITH AN IRON COLLAR.

BEAUTIES OF SLAVERY.

A few days since while Company C of the Iowa 3d, under command of Lieut. Lillingwell, was in the occupancy of Florence guarding the North Missouri Railroad at that point, a negro came dashing towards the camp at eleven o'clock at night, mounted upon a high spirited horse. He was about to pass the guard, who sprang forward and caught the bridle-rein of his horse, and stopped him. The negro threw himself from the animal, and in a crying, obsequious manner, observed, "Massa soger, please let me go in camp and see the Illinoy sogers." The guard informed him that they were Iowa soldiers, and desired to know what he wanted. He hung down his head for a moment, seemingly mapping over some disappointment, and then confessed, "Massa look at dis collar; I'se a good nigger.—Please let me go in." The guard now discovered that he was ironed, and immediately called the officer of the guard, who took him to the guard-house. In the morning he was taken before Lieut. Lillingwell, around whose quarters the whole command had assembled; and never did man look upon a scene more degrading and humiliating than that which was represented to him in the person of this slave. Around his neck was a band of iron half an inch thick, and nearly one and a half inches wide, not locked, but securely riveted. Three iron prongs of lightning rod size were welded to the band, at equal distances apart, and rose above his head about nine inches with an outward inclination. The iron had incerated his neck, and the wounds had partially healed, under the protection he had given to them by holding up the bands with his hands during the preceding days that he was concealed in a corn field, but while riding the horse he could not hold it up and it had opened the wound, from which there was a bloody, mattery ooze trickling down his broad shoulders. The men stood around, gazing upon the scene before them in mute astonishment, and it was not until the negro repeated his petition two or three times that they could realize the fact that the cruelty of the scene before them was the act of a slave master living but a short distance from St. Louis, the enlightened emporium of Missouri. The negro observed, "Please Massa sogers take dis collar off my neck. I am a good nigger; I'll do anything you want me. De Illinoy sogers cut de collar off'er Bus." The Lieutenant immediately ordered it stricken off, when an old file was procured, which could not be made to work upon the band only in a slanting manner. After a labor of three hours it was removed, the men taking turns about—two holding the band while one used the file. The band is now in possession of Lieut. Lillingwell, who holds it as one of the trophies of the 3d Iowa, and the negro is now officiating in his quarters as a servant. The master of this contraband resides about ten miles from Florence. It appears that the negro had carried this iron band upon his neck about three months, as a punishment for assisting his wife to make her escape into Illinois. Gen. Halleck, or some other president commander, may order the band removed upon his neck, and the "property" surrendered to his master; but from what I have seen of the Iowa soldiers, I believe the blood would drip from the end of their bayonets before they would do it. The central and always gives the Missouri troops a wide berth, and generally makes for the Illinois regiments under whose broad shield of bayonets he feels secure.—Letter from St. Louis.

THE DOMESTIC DISPUTES OF THE ELECTOR OF HESSE.

A paragraph was published a day or two back in some of the foreign journals about a mysterious accident which had befallen the Elector of Hesse, and for his share in which a servant had been arrested. A Berlin journal gives a ludicrous version of the affair, which it alleges to be true. The Elector's wife, it seems, was engaged in perusing the pleasant pages of Kladderadatsch, the Berlin Punch, which happened to contain some facetious strokes at the expense of her liege lord and spouse. Liege lord and spouse suddenly coming in and discovering his lady's occupation, was very wroth, and "remonstrated," it is said, in such a fashion that the palace rang piteously with feminine screams. A servant rushed to the rescue, but was met with an Electoral kick, which he endeavored to ward off by detailing hold of his sovereign's foot. The result was a fall, the smashing of a table and a mirror, a wounded head, the Elector confined to his bed, and an order issued that every servant should be at once discharged if ever word of this story were uttered in his hearing. The effort at silencing scarcely appears to have been just as successful as such efforts usually are,

Never run in debt, especially with shoemakers—for then you can't say your sole is your own.

Many persons are in advance of their age, but an old maid generally manages to be about ten years behind her's.

"It's a shame, husband, that I have to sit here mending your old stockings." "Don't say a word about it, wife; the darns suit the account exactly."

We don't want any who will change their views or sentiments with the varying fashions of every season. We want men who have opinions, and principles to maintain, at all times, in the country and out of it.

"Wife," said a newly married man, "I have a presentiment that you will be the death of me." "Indeed, husband, what makes you think so?" "Because I have a presentiment that you will be the death of me."

A ROMANCE.

The story of running after a lover in masculine attire has very often been told, but in one of the principal towns in Sussex, the same course, from exactly the opposite motive, has, it is said, been very lately adopted. As the story runs a young lady not out of her teens, pretty and in well-to-do circumstances, had pressed upon her, by her friends a matrimonial engagement to which she had the greatest aversion. To escape the persecution which this brought upon her, she did as many a heroine of romance has done before—ran away from home. To be discovered and taken home was no part of her purpose; she procured male attire, duffed her pretty locks of raven hair, and, somehow or other, six or eight months ago, she found herself in the town where the story had arisen. Chance would have it that a large fruiterer was in want of help, and here the young lady, in her disbecoming disguise, worked hard with satisfaction to her employer until the time came when her services were no longer required. With undaunted resolution she again sought for "leave to labor," and this time she got employment of a still more laborious character—that of plumber's laborer. In this capacity she to led up and down long ladders over scaffolding, and in many other inappropriate positions, often bearing heavy burdens—till by some chance suspicion fell upon her that she had stolen some of her employer's lead. Of course, during these many months her friends used every endeavour to find the truant, and handbill, advertisements, searchers, and detectives were all fruitlessly combined to discover our heroine. The policeman's newspaper also contained a description of the young lady, for a lengthened period. Well, as we said, our heroine was charged with theft, and evidently found herself in the station-house. On investigation, the charge proved to be unfounded; but the sex of the captive was discovered, and also that she was the subject of the notice referred to. The superintendent of police, a man of kind heart, as well as of tact and judgement, saw that the young lady was decently apparelled, took her to his own residence, and communicated with her friends. They were, of course too glad to hear of her and the superintendent soon had the satisfaction of restoring her, like a prodigal, to her home, a handsome dowerer rewarding him for his care and trouble. It need scarcely be said, there has been a reconciliation between the parties and the obnoxious marriage will never come upon the carpet again.

A MARVELLOUS FACT.

The other day, the Stage-driver on the route between K——— and P———, was accosted by a woman, when the following dialogue passed:—"You are going to marry my daughter, ain't you?" "Why, my good woman, who said that I was going to marry your daughter?" "You, yourself, sir." "I—I mean, I call the "fate." "I witness that I never said so." "Why, its an everybody's secret." "Then let it come out again; I say you old grizzled beard, be off with that, or I'll—" "Stand back, my daughter! I guess that, mam."—and with this the jovial Stage-driver burst into an irrepressible fit of laughter, and started off full speed, I don't what—was the cause of this good-natured laughter—was going to marry the daughter? What—the acquaintance of this world, full of wonders and mysteries—can you guess? No! Well I suppose I must tell you that the Stage-driver was married to the woman's daughter, a few days before, and that the woman was the mother-in-law of the Stage-driver. Now, reader, you have the marvellous fact.

THE GREAT MISSION OF WOMAN.

Great, indeed, is the task assigned to woman! Not to make laws, not to lead armies, not to govern empires; but to form those by whom laws are made, armies led, and empires governed; to guard against the slightest taint of bodily infirmity the frail yet spotless creature whose moral, no less than physical being, must be derived from her; to inspire those doctrines, to animate those sentiments whose generations yet unborn and nations yet uncivilized will learn to bless; to soften firmness into mercy, and constancy into refinement, by a soothing care to allay the anguish of the body, and the far worse anguish of the mind; by her tenderness to disarm passions; by her purity to triumph over sense; to cheer the scholar sinking under his toil; to console the statesman for the ingratitude of a unstable people; to be compensation for friends that are perfidious, for happiness that has passed away. Such is her vocation. The couch of the tortured sufferer, the prison of the deserted friend, and the cross of a rejected Saviour—these are theatres on which her greatest triumphs have been achieved. Such is her destiny; to visit the forsaken, to tend to the neglected wives monarchs abandon, when counsellors betray, when justice prosecutes, when brethern and disciples flee, to remain unshaken and unchanged, and to exhibit in this lower world a type of that love, pure, constant and ineffable, which in another we are taught to believe the test of virtue.

AN INTERESTING RELIC.

Dr. Perkins exhibited at the missionary meeting at London, last week, a copy of the New Testament which he found in Persia, which was seven hundred years old. It was written in the ancient Syriac language, —the same spoken by Jesus Christ when on earth—upon parchment, with a reed for a pen. Of course the volume was costly, though not as large as we should suppose a Testament made in that way would be. It was not thicker than a Webster's unabridged, and not more than two-thirds as large. Dr. Perkins loaned three or four copies of the Testament in this form in that country, which were, if we understood him, the only written language that the people had. By the aid of these he made a language for the Nestorians, and instructed them in it for nearly thirty years. Dr. Perkins also said that this New Testament, which had been transcribed in this rude manner several times and handed down from the time of Christ, was in every important respect, the same as the Word which we now have—a remarkable proof of the authenticity of our Bible. Caledonian, St. Johnsburg, Vt.

AN EXTRAORDINARY DEATH FROM EXCITEMENT

occasioned by the loss of a favorite dog, occurred here on Sunday morning, when Mr. Robert James Denyer, of Pyle-street, printer, was discovered kneeling on the floor, by the side of an old sofa in a back room attached to his office, his head on the edge of it, and his head resting on his hands; he was then quite dead, but not cold, and on the sofa lay the dead body of the dog in question, both seeming to have been deprived of life about the same time. An inquest was held on Monday, at the Town Hall, before F. Blake, Esq., coroner, when it was deposed by Mr. Samuel Goodwin, of the Railway tavern, in Langley street, that the deceased was in the habit of using his house, and that he came in on Saturday night, and ordered a pint of ale, and seemed considerably distressed about the illness of his dog. He remained but a short time, and then left in company with a man named Thomas Cheverton, for the purpose of seeing how the dog was doing, and returned in about half-an-hour, when deceased had a glass of rum, and after that part of a pint of beer with Cheverton.—Witness having at his request made him some gruel for the dog. Cheverton said the first time he accompanied deceased home he administered a dose of castor oil to the dog, which he seemed desperately fond of and then returned to Mr. Goodwin's; on the next occasion he accompanied him home and administered a portion of the gruel, leaving the dog on the sofa, the deceased saying he would light a fire and sit up with it all night. Witness then left the house at a quarter past 12, the deceased heartily wishing him good-night, desiring him to come next morning, and locking the door after him. Witness went to the house at the time appointed, but could make no one hear, and after some time had elapsed the apprentice (deceased's nephew) was assisted through the fan-light over the door, which was then opened and several people admitted, when his room door was found also fastened, but admission was obtained through the window, and deceased and his dog were found as described above. Deceased was dressed, with the exception of his neckcloth, and his trowsers were partly down, the candle and fire were both out, and the body was fairly cold. Inspector Grapes said he had strictly examined the room, suspecting from the extraordinary fact that deceased and his dog were found together that poison had been administered, but he could discover neither bottle, drug or mixture of any kind, only the remains of the castor oil and the gruel. Dr. Tattlet being of opinion that death was occasioned by exciting at which occasioned suppression of the brain or a rupture of the capacity of the heart, and that he could discover no symptoms of poisoning, the jury rendered a verdict of "Died from natural causes.—Newport (Monmouth) Chronicle.

COUGHING IN CHURCH.

A Last Appeal.—On Sabbath afternoon, in one of the established Churches in town, while the minister was proceeding with a discourse on the body of the Church of Christ, he was much annoyed with the accompaniment, so frequent at this season, of continual coughing on the part of his hearers. At length his nerves could stand it no longer, and, almost in despair, he appealed to the people to allow him to go on with his discourse without further molestation, assuring him that he would not put their forbearance to a severe test. The effect of this appeal was no more than a momentary cessation of the annoyance. In a few minutes it recommenced with renewed vigour, and the reverend gentleman, at the last of his patience, sat down, leaving his hearers in immense surprise at the sudden interruption of the sermon. This expedient on the part of the speaker for the time produced the desired effect; the people ceased to cough; he resumed his discourse; and was permitted in peace to bring it to a termination. In his perambulation, however, he remarked indirectly on what had occurred for in enumerating the hindrances which existed to the perfecting of the body of the Church, he mentioned as one "an ill-bred congregation."—Dundas Advertiser.

AN ARISTOCRATIC "SELL."

This is the age of practical joking; and what are vulgarly termed "sells" seem to interest all alike. An amusing instance has lately been perpetrated by one of our West End jewellers. A rich morocco case, of the size and form of an ordinary photographic miniature, is lettered outside with gold "Portrait of the Gorilla." It is laid carelessly on the drawing-room table, with scrap-books, &c. The unlucky sucker, beholding it for the first time, seizes it with impatience,—"Ah! I have not seen that"—opens it with eager haste, and beholds a portrait of himself reflected in a palpable piece of looking glass. He swindered and bearded the joke tells amazingly. He drops it with speed, and the gorilla tries to enjoy it.

A ROMANTIC CASE.

There died recently in the neighborhood of Perth, Scotland, an old man about 70 years. He was married at an early period of his life, and had sons and daughters well up in years. After enjoying the blessings of matrimony for a long time, the partner of his bosom died, and left him to struggle on with his family. Two or three years since he met with a middle-aged woman, who contrived to excite a flame in his heart, and he accordingly determined to marry her. His family were averse to this movement, and managed in the end to prevent it. Nothing was said of the affair until the decease of the aged lover took place, and then the relatives, mutually anxious to find out how much had been left them, all crowded round to hear the reading of the Will. Imagine their consternation on learning that the deceased had left his entire fortune (no small amount, it would appear) to the woman whom his relatives had prevented him from marrying, and had quite overlooked his nearer, but not more dear friends.

THE GOLD FIELDS OF NOVA SCOTIA.

A pamphlet has just appeared which is likely to excite some interest among persons engaged in mining pursuits with capital. It has been written by Mr. Gesner, of New York city, who, it appears, was commissioned by gentlemen of science and influence to explore the gold regions of Nova Scotia. The gold has been discovered in quantities along certain lines running parallel with the Atlantic shore, where it is of easy access, and it extends to a distance of two hundred miles, east and west. It occurs in the township of Sherbrooke, at Tangier, also near Halifax, and at other places. So far, according to the report, a site near Lunenburg, singularly called "The Ovens," appears to be very rich in gold. The sands of the entire shore, and also the rock of a small peninsula, yield the precious metal, and government had been called upon to lease every square yard of its surface.—Small lots have already been sold at high prices, and the amount of the precious metal produced in a very short period is truly surprising. The colonial government has purchased a small part of the gold, with some fine nuggets, to be displayed at the London Industrial Exhibition in March next. The finest sample of gold from these new discoveries in Nova Scotia was received at the Philadelphia mint lately. Its appearance in the natural state is that of small flattened grains similar to the surface gold of California. There is a loss of about eight per cent in melting. The finest proved to be 898 thousandths, which is very near the standard of our coin, making the value about $17.10 per ounce of native gold, or $18.56 in the bar after melting. Chicago Tribune.

ADVERTISING IN PARIS.—Recently upon the Bain de Boulogne, in Paris, in a well-appointed bathing establishment, were to be seen a gentleman, having on either side of him a lady in a bath dress, and without a bonnet. One of these had a profusion of golden locks, exquisitely arranged; the other was a brunette, with hair equally good, both turned their heads toward the apparently favored gentleman sitting between them, whom they seemed to be addressing with great animation. The first impression on the spectator, after admiring the beautiful hair of these ladies, was one of wonderment that they should remain drenched in the cold wave in public; but on closer inspection it appeared that they had each fastened and tied the marriage fee to their bathing costumes, and were thus advertising the establishment.

THE FUTURE OF THE UNITED STATES.

From all the evidence which reaches us daily it is safe to conclude that The South in Confederacy is fast approaching its end. The recent operations of the Federal arms have left no doubt upon this point. Indeed, Mr. Davis, in his recent message to his Congress, admits quite as much. "I have" "he says," "to communicate that since the "message at the last session of the Pro- "visional Congress, events have demon- "strated that the Government had attempt- "ed more than it had power successfully to "achieve;" and the whole message is little more than the recital of disasters to the Confederate arms. The war has literally been carried into Africa, and the insurgents beat beaten upon their own ground.

In the course of the sad events which have occurred since this unhappy revolt, many and serious misunderstandings have taken place between the United States and some European Powers, especially with Great Britain. The North, as well as the South, over-estimated both their strength and importance in the eyes of Europe.—Both nations carelessly sought to use Great Britain for their respective and conflicting purposes upon the British necessity for cotton and corn. The South bid adroitly for British sympathy and recognition by her statesman-like tariff; while the North by her unwise Morrill tariff hurt John Bull in his most susceptible point—exclusion of his manufactures and the coerced idleness of his ships. This was tantamount to touching his purse; and we know from Byron, that keen observer of the human nature, that

Kill a man's whole family, and he'll brook it,
But keep your hands out of his breeches pocket.

Connected with this proceeding followed Mr. Seward's flourishing diplomatic despatches to the American Ministers at foreign Courts, threatening European Powers with the high displeasure of the United States Government should they recognize the Southern Confederacy. But, although thus threatened, subjected to an injurious tariff, deprived of cotton, upon which nearly five millions of her people subsisted, and goaded to desperation by a passionate and dishonest press at both sides of the Atlantic, the New York broadsheets pouring their daily and accumulative insults against both the people and the Government of Great Britain—daring her to do what she did not mean to do—and these taunts answered back by the more polished, powerful and influential British press, which endeavoured to confuse the plain question of fact between the North and South, and sought, by every means, not only to blind the British people as to the grand issue in question between the United States and her rebellious citizens, but some of them even aimed at driving the British Government into open hostility towards the Federal Government, and into a spiteful and premature acknowledgement of the Southern Confederacy. Notwithstanding all these circumstances, Great Britain satisfied herself with simply acknowledging the belligerent rights of both parties. The wisdom of this course has been seen in the subsequent acts of the Federal Government, which has virtually acknowledged the belligerent rights of the South.

Lessons of wisdom have been thus taught a new and inexperienced nation by the mature judgment and statesmanship of Earl Russell, whose moderate and judicious counsels prevail in the British Foreign Office. The United States Secretary of State ought to have known, when he was inditing his dashing diplomatic epistles that Great Britain has always been slow in acknowledging new powers whose independence has been founded by casting off allegiance to a long-established Government, so that the hopes of the South and the fears of the North were equally destitute of reason. It ought to be remembered, too, as a lesson in history as well as in political economy, that powerful nations do not dread the insolent dictation of other nations, do not shape their course according to their temporal inconvenience or upon the threat of a deprivation of any commodity. A wealthy, a powerful, and enterprising nation may be shut out by circumstances from one most important branch of commerce, but she will find a hundred avenues of commerce instead, when put upon her mettle. This is proved by the fact that Great Britain does not stand in need of cotton, and is thoroughly independent of North and South upon this point.

But to come back to the point from which we started—we mean the rehabilitation of the Union. In considering the proximate accomplishment of this most devoutedly wished-for consummation, we cannot avoid, as it were, casting the horoscope of the future of the United States. And first, and in the foremost rank, stands that unhappy question of slavery. Here let us say in advance that we are not of the abolition creed. We profess no false doctrines of pretentious humanitarianism. We see the gigantic difficulties of this question, and we sympathize with the nation that has been sorely afflicted with it, and has to wrestle with it. It is the moral, the social, the political, the national grievance of the United States. It is their curse and their blight. It is the cancer preying upon the national vitality. It is the anomalous comment upon that boasted freedom which, when we are told, it is the sublimity of human government, is rebuked by the charge against that constitution which sanctions, for the gross, material purposes of man, human slavery—the right of a man in a fellow creature, analagous to the right he would hold in the mere brute. It has brutalized the South; it has driven it to revolt against its legitimate Government; it has inflicted a series of evils upon America over which the future historian must weep when he comes to record the deaths of the manhood, the bravery, and the chivalry of the country fighting in vindication of that Government which cherishes the unnatural crime which daily threatens its own destruction.

Slavery is avowedly the cause of the rebellion. But while this is so we do not hold that the question of slavery is, or should be, the first duty of the United States Government. That first duty is the restoration of the Union. Statesmen, politicians, citizens of the United States, first restore all the blighting and miserable causes that have brought upon you your present unhappy national condition. Remember that no nation that was ever cursed with slavery has survived. The Greece and Rome that hold slaves are blotted from the very map of nations; and remember, too, that the United States is the only civilized nation of modern times that cherishes in her midst the horrible system.

We admit the difficulties in the solution of this question. But, if there be statesmanship in the country and a desire to get rid of the difficulty, surely the evil can be abated. Now or never must be the motto of every man who would see the United States prosper, which he cannot do with the curse of slavery in her midst. Never was there such an opportunity presented for settling definitely the national question.—We are happy to perceive that legislation has already been taken up by the United States Senate. The Republican Government upon Mr. Sumner's resolutions, establishing Territorial Government in the revolted States, and assigning to them executive, legislative, and judicial officers, to be appointed by the President, who shall form a governing council, providing especially that slavery shall in no way be legally recognized. This bill, should it be carried through Congress, which we however much doubt, would virtually establish emancipation in the Slave States. But this is merely a step in the right direction. We do not by any means agree that universal emancipation should be at once commenced. This is going too far, and trying to establish what is utterly impracticable and altogether undesirable. The question must be one of time—we mean in its operation. Lay the principle at once, contemporaneously with the re-establishment of the Union, and let the details be worked out by men of patriotism and purity. Let slavery be ended. For instance, let the bill to which we refer be passed, place the revolted States on the same footing as the Territories, thereby taking from those in rebellion all rights, which should be assumed forthwith by Congress. This would go far to settle this question. It would lay the basis of its solution. Up to the present, all things considered, the Lincoln Administration has acted both ably and wisely. There is one mission before it still—in restoring the Union let slavery be assigned its due limits—where it is to end—and when it shall terminate. At all events, let there be no more political capital made upon the perpetuation of slavery. Let there be no Ostend manifestoes, combining filibusterism and pro-slavery. If the United States have any respect for themselves they must turn over a new leaf on this subject, and when a pro-slavery candidate for the Presidency comes before them, they must reject him at once.

One thing we will say, in conclusion, that if the United States be restored in statu quo ante bellum, the same causes which produced the same results of rebellion and attempted national destruction, will be productive of the same evils again. History repeats itself; like causes produce like results. In self-defence let the Government of the United States end slavery. But above all let not the national Legislature continue to breathe the atmosphere of slavery in the District of Columbia.—Scottish American Journal.

SLAVERY DOOMED.

The present Government of the United States is not an Abolition Government.—Abolitionists in America mean those who do not keep within the Constitution; who demand the destruction (as far as Slavery is concerned) of as much of it as protects the internal legislation of each State from the control of Congress; who aim at abolishing Slavery wherever it exists, by force if needs be, but certainly by some other power than the constituted authorities of the Slave States. The Republican party neither aim nor profess to aim at this object. And when we consider the flood of wrath which would have been poured out against them if they did, by the very writers who now taunt them with not doing it, we shall be apt to think the taunt a little misplaced.—But though not an Abolitionist party, they are a Free-Soil party. If they have not taken arms against Slavery, they have against its extention. And they know, as we may know if we please, that this amounts to the same thing. The day when Slavery can no longer extend itself, is the day of its doom. The slave-owners know this, and it is the cause of their fury. They know, as all know who have attended to the subject, that confinement within existing limits is its death-warrant. Slavery, under the conditions in which it exists in the States, exhausts even the beneficent powers of nature. So incompatible is it with any kind whatever of skilled labor, that it ensures the whole productive resources of the country to be concentrated on one or two products, cotton being the chief, which requires to raise and prepare them for the market, little beside brute, animal force. The cotton cultivation, in the opinion of all competent judges, alone saves North-American Slavery; but cotton cultivation, exclusively adhered to, exhausts in a moderate number of years all the soils which are fit for it, and can only be kept up by travelling further and further westward. Mr. Olmsted has given a vivid description of the desolate state of parts of Georgia and the Carolinas, once among the richest specimens of soil and cultivation in the world; and even the more recently colonized Alabama, as he shows, is rapidly following in the same downhill track. To Slavery, therefore, it is a matter of life and death, to find fresh fields for the employment of slave labor. Confine it to the present States, and the owners of slave property will either be speedily ruined, or will have to find means of reforming and renovating their agricultural system, which cannot be done without treating the slaves like human beings, nor without so large an employment of skilled—that is, of free—labor, as will widely displace the unskilled, and so depreciate the pecuniary value of the slave, that the immediate mitigation and ultimate extinction of Slavery would be a nearly inevitable and probably rapid consequence.

But the parties in a protracted civil war almost always end by taking more extreme, not to say higher grounds of principle than they began with. Middle parties and friends of compromise are soon left behind; and if the writers who so severely criticise the present moderation of the Free-soilers are desirous to see the war become an abolition war, it is probable that if the war lasts long enough they will be gratified. Without the smallest pretension to see further into futurity than other people, I at least have foreseen and foretold from the first that if the South were not promptly put down the contest would become distinctly an Anti-Slavery one; nor do I believe that any person accustomed to reflect on the course of human affairs in troubled times can expect anything else. Those who have read, even cursorily, the most valuable testimony to which the English public have access, concerning the real state of affairs in America—the letters of the Times correspondent, Mr. Russell—must have observed how early and rapidly he arrived at the same conclusion, and with what increasing emphasis he now confidently reiterates it. In one of his letters he names the date of next summer as the period by which, if the war has not sooner terminated, it will have assumed a complete Anti-Slavery character. So early a term expends, I confess, my most sanguine hopes; but if Mr. Russell be right, Heaven forbid that the war should cease sooner, for if it lasts till then it is quite possible that it will regenerate the American people.

The Chicago Times says:—The labor of repairing their Guards' kit, time is progressing for some time past. Already the heavy timbers used in the Barbette guns are to be superseded on Sumter, and will be put in their places as soon as the frost goes out of the ground. When completed, Fort Sumter will be one of the strongest fortifications on the continent. Just before the PARLIAMENT MEETS TO-DAY.

We will spare no pains to put our readers in possession of the best reports of the proceedings throughout the Session. Our Quebec correspondent will greatly assist us in this.

Representation by Population.

Our cotemporary of the Cobourg Sun seems jubilant at the announcement he makes that the party to which he belongs have at length a prospect of realizing what they have so long struggled for—heretofore in vain. Here are his words:—"The party which has struggled for ten long years to secure the enactment of Representation by Population, hope that they at last see a prospect of its enactment. All other questions, all other measures should justly be held subservient to this." He states that not only are nearly all the members elect from Upper Canada pledged to this measure, but a considerable number of Lower Canadians also are disposed to do us justice, and that those who should know assert that there will be a majority of the whole House in favor of the measure.

We are of opinion, however, that the Sun's authorities for the statement above are in error, as our cotemporary is in his chronology. The Reform party ten years ago had not a whisper anent Representation by Population—at least it formed no article in their political creed. That it has been held for several years back by the leading members of the Reform party we readily admit and that it was also held by some, as it is now held by the Sun, as a sine qua non; but we must not shut our eyes to the facts in relation therewith. The Globe has not been consistant in its advocacy of this measure. It at one time maintained that the adoption of this principle would correct the present unseemly practice of Lower Canadians ruling Upper Canada by their votes, that Representation by Population would give us a majority and we could then carry our own measures. At another time it was discovered that if this measure were adopted it would not cure the political ills we laboured under, and dissolution of the existing Union pure and simple was the panacea to cure all the ills the body politic was heir to.

The Reform Convention which assembled in Toronto, November, 1859, adopted and recommended to the people of Canada this new discovered remedy for our political evils. We need not state the Reformers rejected this suicidal measure, and the sober sense of the leaders themselves has returned, and we never now hear of either "dissolution of the Union" or "joint authority," except it be as a taunt to the party originating them. Representation by Population is still very popular, and justly so, for it is a principle recognized everywhere in popular free governments. It has, however, difficulties in our case which it is wise to look "square in the face." It must be remembered that when the Imperial Government passed the Union Act, connecting Upper and Lower Canada together under one Legislature, one of the provisions of that Act was that each section of the Province should have an equal representation in the Legislature, altogether irrespective of population. At this period the Lower Canadians being largely in excess of population had but an equal number of representatives with us. If now we insist upon the principle being adopted, the Union Act will have to be amended. This, doubtless, can and will be done—this is not the difficulty in the way of obtaining this popular measure. It appears to us that is the present state of political feeling it cannot be obtained. We form this opinion upon the fact that the question is one that is very much disliked in Lower Canada—and that a large number in Central Canada are not in favor of it. So far from a considerable number of Lower Canadian members "being in favor of the measure," very few indeed will, we opine, be found to vote for it, and we fear that many from Upper Canada who very glibly discoursed upon the subject at the hustings at the last elections, when a vote is to be taken in the House, will be either sick or conveniently absent. No one, for instance, imagines that the Hon. Postmaster-General cares a fig for Representation by Population, further than its advocacy furnishes him with an introduction to its real supporters when soliciting their suffrages. A double shuffler cannot be an honest advocate of Representation by Population any more than of other of the people's rights. When the House comes to try its strength we have no reason to suppose that it will act otherwise than as heretofore —the Ministers will yield this as well as other matters to Lower Canada to secure its support. A goodly number of Upper Canada members, including the majority from Central Canada will vote with the Ministry, and we may as well suppose we shall have honest legislation from our present corrupt Administration as Representation according to Population. This there will, we fear, be disappointed again. We must wait till a greater change takes place in the minds of the people. Until the heaven-born principles of truth and honest legislation is done away with, we need not be surprised that the people's rights are trampled in the dust. We, of Canada West, were led to feel last year the consequence of trusting to a section of the country, when the Premier's representative from that section broke the Confederation of Lower Canada and Nova Scotia and Upper Canada freemen. Until the prompt Confederation is dispersed we may despair of realizing Representation by Population. It is, however, right and proper to keep that matter before the people, so some degree another no ministry dare slight it. It is a principle indelibly engraven on the Western heart—a principle at once just and correct—and its adoption is only a question of time.

Our cotemporary in referring to the rumored changes in the Cabinet just now so prevalent, pledges the fealty of the representatives from the old Newcastle District to the people's cause. Whatever changes may take place the five members from this section will not sanction the continuance of tyrannical misrule." His description of them seperately may well challenge comparison. He draws the worthy member from East Northumberland as near perfection as can well be. His language is glowing and superlative in the highest degree: "No whisper of doubt from friend or foe cast the shadow of a shade of suspicion on the political character of the able representative of East Northumberland." We feel strongly tempted to criticise this passage for its questionable syntax and composition, but we forbear, and hope that our warm hearted contemporary will learn to shorten sail. We should be sorry to be understood as reflecting on an individual case, as the worthy member referred to is a stranger to us. We speak of men generally, and we have lived long enough to know that the man is not to be found who has been in Parliament or before the public who comes up to the description here given. At the same time we feel pleased that such a knot of first-rate trusty Reformers are to go from these parts, and we trust they will make their mark in the House and in the country, and that their upright and consistent conduct will tend to hasten the inauguration of a new order of things.

COAL OIL ACCIDENTS.

No one can help being struck with the great number of accidents from the use of Coal Oil occurring. A cotemporary says:—

"The numerous accidents occurring in consequence of the improper management in the use of Coal Oil, as well as not securing a pure article, renders great caution necessary. It is well ascertained that properly rectified oil will not explode,—in proof of which we saw some Kerosene Oil poured into a vessel and a lighted paper applied without any bad result. Persons using coal oil lamps should always trim and replenish them in daylight,—should keep the small air holes constantly clear—renew the wick before it is nearly gone,—and not place the lamp when lighted too near a hot fire. Perhaps a small air-hole in the top of the can or keg in which the oil is kept, by allowing the generated gas to escape, would obviate accidents from explosion."

Mr. W. R. Hibbard, of Montreal, writes to the Witness on the subject. He offers a few sensible remarks:—

"So long as Bituminous coal was the only substance from which this valuable article could be manufactured, there was little or no ground for apprehension; but since the discovery of petroleum, or well oil, the public has been exposed to serious danger from the recklessness of ignorant and avaricious refiners. Petroleum contains a large proportion of utterly unsafe matter, which ought to be entirely removed before the oil is offered for burning purposes, and the real danger lies in the temptation to allow those volatile substances to remain. When all explosive matter is entirely removed the reliable product is greatly lessened in quantity, and thus the manufacturer's profits are curtailed. A refiner who does his work conscientiously has generally quantities of the explosive portion of the oil on hand, which he offers to painters, varnishers, and others as a substitute for turpentine, at half the cost of burning oil; while the unscrupulous manufacturer can afford to place his oil in the market at a price sufficiently tempting to retailers, but of a quality dangerous to the consumer."

It seems then to be an established fact that the fault is in the refining of the oil, or in its adulteration at the refineries. There is a very easy test to know the explosive from the non-explosive oil, ie.: Place a small quantity in a vessel and apply a light. If it is explosive it will at once ignite and burn like camphene, if non-explosive it will remain like water, free from flame or fire of any sort. We were assured, the other day, by a gentleman who has had occasion to use and sell it largely, that he has not yet met any explosive oil. He has had only the best qualities.

We may safely assume that it is only the cheap and inferior qualities that are liable to explosion. All consumers of coal oil should be careful to get a safe article, and dealers should see to it that they do not vend a dangerous oil that may be the cause of serious injury to many.

The Port Hope Guide has again changed hands, other duties requiring the late publisher's presence in Quebec. In the valedictory a complaint is made against the men who like to be styled the "leading Reformers" of the place, for the sad neglect of their party organ. Many of those gentlemen, everywhere, talk a deal about having an ably-conducted paper, etc., but the talk seems to affect their pockets and consciences but little. If they have a favor in the shape of "patronage" at their disposal, more likely than not they will pass the door of their own printing office, and give it to the hired and paid, well-fed, bolstered-up, organ of the Coalition, although they know they can be as well served, and more cheaply, at their own. And they do so just to show their "liberality", as they call it,—to show how free they are from party prejudice. These remarks do not apply to all the gentlemen in question; indeed it is to the exceptions that we owe the existence of a Reform press in the country at all.

Mr. James W. Bevan, who succeeds Mess. Johnstone in the publishing of the Guide, is a practical printer, and has been for some years connected with the office. From this fact we have confidence in his success.

For Cariboo!—A number of persons have left this place within the past week for the new El Dorado. As far as we can learn the following are their names.—Peterboro: James Sheridan, C. Hughes, Thos. Poole, John W. Edwards, Frank Fortye, —— Casey, James Welsh, and many with, we need not be surprised that the people's rights are trampled in the dust. We, of Canada West, were led to feel last year the consequence of trusting to a section of the country, when the Premier's representative from that section broke the

THE HAMILTON "TIMES" AND THE "LEADER" ON THE LICENSE LAW.

There appeared in the Leader of Monday last a notice of some views enunciated in the Hamilton Times, on the very annoying question of granting licenses in Municipalities. The Leader seems to imagine that no difficulty exists in carrying out the law as it now stands—a certain fact that it knows very little about it. It is but fair, however, to state that it predicates the feasibility of enforcing the law by certain conditions existing or complied with. The three important "ifs" being given, the rest may follow; but, like the sunken fleet in Charleston harbor, they block up the ingress to its favorite theories. "If the Council is honest, the law can be enforced, if there is but a desire to enforce it, and if every one who sold liquor without a license was fined the full amount allowed by law, $50." Ah! these "ifs" make the rub. It is a law that in many localities, such as Towns and Villages, may be observed as to the issue of licenses; but it will neither tend to suppress intemperance nor help to make the traffic in intoxicating liquors respectable —the Leader to the contrary notwithstanding. The present law seems based upon the principle of monopoly—a principle utterly ignored by our Municipal institutions, and always deemed odious. A and B invest largely of their means in Tavern or Hotel property. A gets a license for his house; B does not. A next year is refused a license; B gets one. B was stealthily selling before, now he is a legalized vendor, and A now becomes the surreptitious dealer. The demand exists, and the supply will be forthcoming. But, says the Leader, the suppression of intemperance and crime are considerations the law contemplates in its present form, and in Toronto the restriction has lead to the effect of raising the character of public houses. The simple English of which is that the Legislature is anxious that intemperance henceforth shall be more respectable. The granting of a license is intended to make the selling of spirituous liquors legal; if, then, the traffic becomes legal by granting a license for one place, for every 250 of the inhabitants, what moral objection can there be to sanction one for every 25?—The Leader replies that its intention by restricting to 250 is to suppress intemperance. If this be so, why not make the law more stringent still and enact henceforth that there shall be but one tavern license issued for every 250,000 of the inhabitants? Surely, if drunkenness and its concomitants are evils, the less of them the better. But, replies the objector, this measure will not meet the demands of the community. Exactly so! the demand for intoxicating liquors exists, and it will be supplied, legally or otherwise; and the present law will not reduce one iota of that demand. We had supposed that our contemporary would no more think of making men temperate by Acts of Parliament, than making them Christians, but it appears we were mistaken. Our object, however, in alluding to this subject now was not to give an opinion upon the licensing system, but to notice the palpable ignorance of the Times in referring to the difficulties arising from the present law, and pointing out the remedy. It says —we quote from the Leader—"Let the Legislature, if it will, pass a law declaring what accomodation each house shall have before it can obtain a license—let it command that it shall have one bed or 20, room for 10 horses or 100, whichever it might think proper—let it provide that no man shall receive a license until it is recommended by 10, 20, or 50 ratepayers, whichever in its judgment it thinks best." To which the Leader thus replies: "Who ever heard of a Parliament of a country passing such a law as this? Where would be the use of Municipal Councils were the Legislature to descend to the enactment of such a petty measure as that urged by our cotemporary?" Let the Leader take up the Statutes for 1860 and look at Cap. 53, and he will find that the Legislature has passed just such a petty measure as that urged by the Times. It enacts that no license shall be granted to any one but upon a petition signed by at least 30 of the resident Municipal electors—that every tavern so licensed must have not less than 4 bed-rooms, and suitable complement of bedding and furniture; and, except in Cities and Towns, stabling for at least 6 horses. We trust our cotemporaries will thank us for enlightening them upon a matter they ought to have been posted up on before making themselves ridiculous.

EXTENSION OF THE TOWN LIMITS.

The following is the resolution for the extension of the Town limits, passed at the last meeting of the Council:

Whereas, by the 19th section of the Municipal Institutions Act of Upper Canada, authority is given to Municipal Councils of Cities and Towns to pass a resolution affirming the expediency of a new division into Wards being made of the City or Town, or a part of the same, either within the existing limits or with the addition of any part of the localities adjacent, which from the proximity of streets or buildings therein, or the probable future exigencies of such City or Town, it may seem desirable to add thereto respectively.

And whereas the present limits of the Town of Peterborough are so circumscribed as seriously to retard its progress, and it is therefore desirable to extend the limits by making a new division of the Town into Wards, adding thereto such part of the Township of Monaghan as the present and future exigencies of the said Town require.

Be it therefore resolved that it is desirable to petition His Excellency the Governor General to issue his proclamation constituting the following the future limits of the Town, that is to say:

Commencing from the centre of the Otonabee river, in the 10th Concession of the Township of Monaghan at a point where the division line between Lots Nos. 12 and 13 strikes the said River, thence northerly along said division line to the northerly limits of the said Township of Monaghan, thence easterly along said northern limits to the centre of the Otonabee river, and thence down said river to the place of beginning.

And dividing the Town into four wards, to be known respectively as the North, Centre, South and East Wards.

The North Ward to commence at the intersection of George and Smith streets, thence westerly along the boundary line between the townships of Smith and Monaghan, to the line between the park lots and No. 12 in the 13th concession of the Township of Monaghan. Then southerly along said line to the dividing line between park lots Nos. 11 and 12, thence easterly along said dividing line to Park street, and thence along the north side of Rubeck street to George street, and then northerly along George street to the place of beginning.

The Centre Ward to commence at the intersection of George and Brock street south side, thence along Brock street to the dividing line between park lots Nos. 11 and 12 to the dividing line between the Park lots and No. 12, 13th concession Monaghan, thence southerly along said line to the gravel road, between park lots 5 and 6, thence easterly along said road to Park street, then along the north side of Charlotte street to George street, then northerly along said street to the place of beginning.

The South Ward to embrace the southern part of the Town, including the land at the south end of the Town, and the park lots embraced between the dividing line of lots Nos. 12 and 13 in the township of Monaghan and the Otonabee river, and the west of George street and its extension southerly.

The East Ward to embrace that part of the town lying on the east side of George street, and its extension southerly to the Otonabee River.

OUR MEMBER.

The Cobourg Sun says of our worthy County member:

"Col. Haultain, the noble soldier, who has spent many years in the military service, and who has frequently ventured to appear in public, donning the armour of a soldier of the cross, enters the House under happy auspices. While unknown, personally, to three-fourths of his constituents, he was elected by a good majority. Now he is very popular, almost idolized by his people, who admire the rigid consistency of his unblemished personal character, and the noble integrety of his high aims and motives."

MATRIMONIAL.

We find the following advertisement in the Port Hope Messenger, and give the advertiser the benefit of it in our columns gratis. Young ladies "matrimonially inclined" should communicate without delay with "drawer 54, Port Hope":

WANTED—A WIFE!

THE advertiser wishes to form an acquaintance with a young lady desirous of entering the matrimonial state, in company with a respectable and well-educated young man. The advertiser is strictly sincere; and his fair correspondents may rest assured that correspondence on his part shall be honorable and confidential.

A LAND BOUNTY FOR VOLUNTEERS.

A correspondent of the Montreal press who signs himself A Volunteer, in the course of a long and able letter on "military organization" remarks in regard to the best means of attracting a sufficient number of good citizen soldiers to the ranks of the Volunteer Militia of the Province, namely by a reward in land at the close of a certain term of service. We will quote the remarks bearing on this point.

"Every man capable of bearing arms, between the ages of 18 and 60, should, by law, be compelled to pay an exemption tax of 5s. per annum if not in the Volunteers, to form a fund for defraying the expenses of those actually engaged in drill, whether in the Active or Sedentary force. After a term of seven years' service each volunteer private should receive a gratuity of 100 acres of land, provided he has so served faithfully, and to the entire satisfaction of his Commanding Officers. Habitual drunkenness, insubordination, neglect or carelessness, proved against him during that period to deprive him of any such gratuity under certain regulations, and in case of war every year to be reckoned as 2 years of such service. The non-commissioned officers to receive 125 acres, and the officers to receive as follows: Ensigns, 200 acres; lieutenants, 300 acres; Captains, 350 acres; Lieut. Cols. 400 acres; and Colonels, 450 acres. For this purpose I need only point out the millions of acres of unconceded lands between this and the Red River Settlement, to plant this Military Colony, which would be equally advantageous to the recipients and the Government."

The above idea of a bounty for volunteers is perhaps too extravagant, but we think some provision of reward should certainly be made to those who devote their time, means, and energies, to the good movement.

☞ "A subscriber" writes from Bobcaygeon a letter for insertion which we decline publishing for two reasons. Firstly, the name of the writer is not affixed, and secondly, we cannot allow our paper to become the vehicle of a threat to any one, no matter how great the provocation in the case may be.

New Hardware Store.—We have much pleasure in welcoming a new business firm, Messrs. Millar & Bertram, to our Town. They open in the store formerly occupied by Messrs. A. Fowlis & Co. Messrs. M. & B. have both had long experience in the Hardware business, in Montreal. Their advertisement appears in our advertising columns.

CURLING.

The third game—the last match of the season—was played in Peterboro on Friday last, resulting in favor of Peterboro by 18 points.

The unpropitious weather of the day was a drawback to the match.

☞ We have received the first number of the Morning Herald, a new daily issued from the Brant Herald office. From the known ability of its conductor, there is no doubt of its success in the thriving town of Brantford, now emerging from the status of a Town to that of a City. We wish our contemporary success in his new enterprise.

☞ A communication from our respected friend, Billa Flint, Esq., of Belleville, is received too late for this issue. Will appear next week.

☞ The sale of the Toronto Leader has been prohibited in St. Louis, Mo.—The sale of all Jeff. Davis' organs has been strictly forbidden.

☞ We are pained to notice the sudden demise of two of the members of the family of the late John R. Clarke, Esq., the respected member for the East Riding of the County of Northumberland—Joseph Pearson, aged 28 years, and Catherine Margaret, aged 11 years, from typhoid fever. Four deaths have taken place in the same family, from the same malady, in as many months.

☞ We understand that the lumbering operations are going on briskly in our rear, the weather being favorable.

News of the Week.

Alluding to the probability of war with the Federal States, the London Times of The 7th February says:—"The worst part of the struggle, however, will not be on the North Atlantic seaboard, but on the great Lakes of Upper Canada and North America. We are glad, therefore, to be able to tell our readers, that this danger has been foreseen and amply provided against, and that within a week after the breaking up of the ice in the rivers and canals, a whole fleet of gunboats, with the most powerful of the screw corvettes sent out to Admiral Milne, will carry the protection of the English flag from Montreal to Detroit."

The Illustrated London Times says that Lord Palmerston on the first night of the present Session, marched across the lobby with his usual swing, and in form and bulk and feature appeared just the same as we have known him for the last ten years.

Mr. Mason, the Southern Commissioner, shortly after Parliament was opened the other day in England, took his seat in the House of Commons under the gallery. He was introduced by Mr. Gregory, member for Galway, who sat near this notable person.

The conviction and execution of Captain Gordon, for slave-trading, marks the beginning of a new era in the United States, to which attention has not been sufficiently drawn. It is the first instance on record, we believe, of capital punishment being inflicted judicially for that crime; and it involves a principle which also applies to liquor-selling or any other business that destroys men's liver. If the man who kills an individual with his hand be guilty of murder the man who knowingly kills hundreds by his business should not go free. Public opinion rose, some considerable time ago, to the necessary point for executing those laws.

In the Queen's prison, London, William Miller, an aged prisoner, has been confined for fifty years, for a debt of a thousand pounds that he says he doesn't owe. He owns property, and because he wouldn't sign it away the other day and become bankrupt, he was ordered to an insane hospital.

We regret to state that on Saturday last, 8th inst., John Owen, in the township of Derby, was killed by a falling branch of a tree. Mr. Owen went out during the forenoon of Saturday, to cut a tree for firewood. About an hour afterward he was found lying with his head buried in the snow, in an insensible condition. The tree at which he had been chopping, was down; and Mr. Owen had stepped back a few yards to be clear of the fall. It is supposed that there had been a hanging limb on one of the neighboring trees, wrenched from its place by some former tree fall, and that this limb was loosened and came down when the maple fell at which he was chopping.—Owen Sound Times.

The Montreal Advertiser states that even before the body of John Boston, Esq. the late Sheriff for that district, was cold at his residence at Cote St. Catharine, the Government had already received 497 applications for the office by telegraph, and the Grand Trunk was compelled to put on an extra train per day until the appointment was disposed of.

Canada exports annually about 30,000,000 cubic feet of timber in a rough state, and about 400,000,000 feet, board measure of sawed lumber. The revenue derived by the Province during the year 1860 for timber cut in the public forests amounted to about £125,000 currency.

The late English mails bring us the news that the Duke of Newcastle has introduced a bill into the House of Lords, which provides that no writ of habeas corpus shall hereafter issue from Great Britain to any Colony where there are lawfully established Courts of Justice authorized to issue such writs.

We are glad that this step has been taken, since it removes all apprehensions of a collision between the Colonial and Imperial Judiciary, such as seemed at one time imminent in the Anderson case.

Fugitives.—The President has given his assent to the act forbidding the return of fugitive slaves by the army. This is another trenchant blow against the peculiar institution.

We regret to learn from the Christian Guardian that the health of Rev Dr. Stinson, President of the Wesleyan Conference, still continues in a precarious state. On Sabbath last there was, however, an evident abatement of the severer symptoms of the disease.

An elderly woman recently priced a load of wood on the Quebec Jacques Cartier Market, and told the Ambient to follow her home with it. On the corner of Prince Edward Street she told the man to hold her basket while she went into the house to get change, and, not returning, he opened the basket. Imagine his feelings when he discovered a new-born infant.

The war is ruining real estate in the city of New York. A paper of last week says: "As the spring advances, real estate operations strengthen. The ugly features noticed a few days ago, however, still prominently stick out—namely, that more than one half the sales are on account of the sheriff. To-day, several houses and lots, located on the east side of the city, were knocked down at an average of twenty per cent below the prices the same sort of property would have commanded eighteen months ago."

A man, named Robert Symes, perished during the snow storm on the 24th ultimo, about seven miles from Portneuf. He left about seven miles in charge of a load of timber, and on his return was overpowered by the storm.—Quebec Vindicator.

Mr. C. P. F. Berkeley, and Mr. Powell, Liberals, have been elected to represent the burgh of Gloucester, England. The third and defeated candidate was Mr. Potter, Liberal Conservative.

The Guelph Advertiser states that the boy named Allen, previously noticed as attacked by hydrophobia, died on Friday evening. He was somewhat better that morning, and faint hopes were entertained that he would recover, but towards the afternoon he grew worse, and the spasms became more frequent, until he sank under their power.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

DEFEAT OF THE CONFEDERATES AT WINCHESTER.

Winchester, March 12.

This celebrated town is at length recovered for the Union.

The march of our forces to Berryville, and the reconnoissance in this vicinity succeeded in deceiving the enemy and misleading them, so that they did not know where to expect an attack. The consequence was, that yesterday afternoon they commenced evacuating the place. General Hamilton meanwhile advanced from Bunker Hill, the Michigan cavalry leading.

1,200 of the enemy's cavalry gave battle supported by a section of artillery. This was about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

A battalion of the 1st Maryland regiment reinforced our cavalry, and one of our sections of artillery came up and replied to the enemy's guns. The fight was soon over. The enemy fled, leaving their two guns, several horses and about 20 men killed and wounded.

Our whole loss was four killed and fifteen wounded, all of the 1st Maryland.

Large stores of ammunition, provisions and enemy horses have fallen into our hands, and the Union flag floats triumphantly over Winchester.

The reception of our troops by the people has been almost enthusiastic.

Gen. Gorman has come in, and he and Gen. Hamilton are exchanging mutual congratulations.

(Special to the Times.)

Washington, March 12.

The statement published that a Council of war in Washington decided, six to four, that the army on the Potomac could not be moved against the enemy at present, is entirely untrue. The General were unanimous that an advance was possible and proper. The only difference was as to the plan of the proposed attack.

A correspondent of the Times, who accompanied the advance upon Centreville and Manassas, has just come in.

It was only last Friday that the retreat of the rebels from Centreville commenced. General Johnston left on Friday morning. Gen. Smith left on Saturday afternoon, and Colonel Stewart last Monday, the day our army left camp on the Potomac.

The retreat was conducted very orderly at first. Everything was carefully cleared up at Centreville—nothing left that could be useful to us.

The forts were well planned and very formidable. They command the roads, and the fire of not less than a hundred guns could be converged upon any approach to the defences, but the guns were never brought from Manassas to mount the Centreville forts.

The railroad track and telegraph line extended from Manassas to Centreville.

The rebel Generals had their headquarters at Centreville altogether, and a more convenient and complete military establishment could not be found in Washington than they had.

Through Manassas the enemy continued their retreat as quickly as it began.

They carried off all their heavy guns from Manassas—40 to 60 in number—part of them doing the marching by turnpike to Warrenton, and a part to Gordonsville, where, it is said, they would make a stand.

It was on Monday evening that the first sign of panic was noticed at Manassas.

A part of Stuart's rear column was preparing a train to move southward by railroad, when they learned some excited rebels had set fire to the bridges ahead of them. They immediately began to burn and destroy, and run away in general confusion.

Five hundred barrels of flour, piled up in ranks had their heads stove in, barrels of molasses suffered in the same way; 150 barrels or kegs of powder were left which they did not know how to destroy in safety.

It seems to be confirmed that the enemy had two weeks since between 50,000 and 60,000 troops at Centreville and Manassas; and that they only began their retreat last Friday, but why they went was a mystery, as that number of men in the fortifications they had prepared would have been equal to three times their force assailing them from without. They must have feared to trust their men, whose enlistments were expiring, or their powder, which many accounts agree, is of very inferior quality.

But the strangest news brought by the Times' correspondent is, that Gen. Jackson and one half his army, whom Gen. Banks yesterday supposed he was closely watching in Winchester, went down the railroad to Manassas one week ago, and quietly vanished off southward.

The other half are said to be moving southward in the valley to the Shenandoah.

Mr. Edwards of New York introduced a joint resolution tendering the thanks of Congress to Mr. Ericsson and Lieutenant Worden. Referred to the Naval Committee.

Gen. Halleck has telegraphed the following:—

St. Louis, March 13.

Hon. E. M. Stanton:

Our artillery and cavalry yesterday attacked the enemy's works half a mile west of Paris, Tenn. The enemy was driven out with a loss of 100 killed, wounded and prisoners. Our loss

Floyd and Wise from their commands until they could give more satisfactory accounts of their action at Fort Donelson—the President is dissatisfied with their reports. The Message states, that neither of them say that reinforcements were asked for, nor do they show that the position could not have been evacuated, and a whole army saved as well as part of it. It is also not shown by what authority the senior Generals abandoned their responsibility by transferring their command to a junior officer."

FEDERAL VICTORY AT NEWBURNE, N.C.

Baltimore, March 18.

The steamer Commodore arrived here this morning direct from the Burnside expedition, and reports the capture of Newberne, N. C., the defeat of the enemy, there, and capture of a large quantity of artillery, after a hard fought battle.

The Federal loss at Newberne is about 90 killed and 400 wounded.

Immediately after the arrival of the Commodore, the bearer of the despatches from General Burnside left in the train for Washington.

SECOND DESPATCH.

It is reported that the Federals took 300 prisoners. Some reports make their loss 50 or 60 killed, and 250 to 300 wounded.

The fight took place on Friday.

There are rumors that one of the Federal Brigadier Generals was killed, but they are not considered reliable.

Griffiths, on the 3rd, would call the attention of the House of Commons to the subject of the final despatch and papers relative to the blockade from Earl Russell to Lord Lyons, dated Feb. 15, which shows that notwithstanding the blockading forces of Charleston and Wilmington, various ships have eluded the blockade, but that if sufficient ships are stationed at ports to prevent access, or create evident danger to vessels leaving or entering, and provided such ships do not voluntarily permit violations, the fact that various ships may have escaped will not of itself prevent the blockade from being effective, adequacy of force being always matter of fact and evidence. A neutral State ought to exercise the greatest forbearance with reference to a disregard of a defective blockade, and ought not to disregard it except when it entertains a conviction shared by other neutrals, that the power of blockade is abused by a State, either unable to institute or maintain it, or unwilling from some motive to do so. Earl Carnarvon in the House of Lords called attention to the fact that the papers contained nothing relative to communications with foreign Governments on the subject. Earl Russell said there had been no formal communications with foreign Governments.

France and other powers had from time to time asked him what the British Government intended to do, but he had referred them to his despatch to Lord Lyons. Earl Russell was also understood to say that he had received word from Lord Lyons that Mr. Seward had informed him that no more alone ships will be used.

In the House of Commons, Gregory gave notice that he would call attention to the blockade on the 7th March.

In reply to enquiries relative to the withdrawal of American cruisers from the coast of Africa, Lord Palmerston said representation had been made to Washington on the subject, but exigencies of war occasioned the withdrawal. He admitted it was not a satisfactory answer to say cruisers had been withdrawn when the object of withdrawal was to accomplish something quite as injurious to commerce.

As to British vessels being allowed, in the absence of Americans, to ascertain nationalities of vessels, that could only be done by consent of the Senate.

It was that that brought me here to-day to my last end, though I am innocent of the murder I am about to suffer for. I never committed the or any other murder. I have nothing of R. CORONER'S INQUEST.

An inquest was held, on Tuesday last, by Dr. Fidler, Coroner, on the body of Mrs. Mary Ann Bousnall (wife of Mr. Thomas Bousnall, of this town) who died the day previous—Monday—after an illness of a week's duration. Owing to a very painful rumour, not afloat by unthinking persons, the Coroner found it necessary, for the satisfaction of the public, to call together a jury for the purpose of inquiring into the circumstances of deceased's death; and at 1 o'clock on Tuesday the following persons were sworn in: J. C. Rodden, Foreman, H. J. Waite, E. D. Hand, Thomas Drake, T. Devaney, C. Britton, John Johnson, Edward Budge, A. Otnley, G. C. Atkinson, L. Meguire, Joseph Funk, and Isaac Marvin. The evidence of Dr. Playter, who attended Mrs. Bousnall, proved to the satisfaction of the jury that her disease, gastic fever, had been aggravated by her indiscretion in taking medicine of her own prescription in addition to that given by her medical attendant, and by her reckless disregard of his instructions respecting diet, &c., Dr. Besson and Dr. Fidler both endorsed Dr. Playter's opinions and all three agreed that the symptoms of her disease found a ready explanation in the facts above mentioned. Under these circumstances, the jury, after a short consideration, found the following verdict:—

"Deceased died from natural causes, and, in the opinion of this jury, there was not the slightest foundation for the rumors which gave rise to this inquest."—Lindsay Adv.

EXPLOSION OF AN OIL FACTORY NEAR STRATFORD.

The London Free Press of yesterday records a terrible occurrence near Stratford caused by the explosion of an Oil Factory. That paper says:—We learn by special telegram that a very serious accident occurred yesterday by the explosion of an oil factory at some point on the Buffalo and Lake Huron Railroad, east of Stratford. The information which we received is very vague and although every exertion was made by Morehouse, the telegraph operator, to procure the news for us, he was unable to do so, owing to the line not being in working order. It is stated that no fewer than 13 persons have been killed, and a large amount of property destroyed, among which are four railroad cars. It is supposed that the oil factory was situated contiguous to the railway track, and that a quantity of the inflammable liquid had been thrown upon the cars in a burning state, and that it became impossible to have them removed. Of course we do not vouch for the accuracy of the details; but that an accident of a very serious nature has occurred we have not the shadow of a doubt.

The N.Y. World remarks:—The Bank of Montreal offers to advance upon produce in store on short or long time, payable in Chicago or eastern cities, as preferred. This shows that the managers have entire confidence that friendly relations will continue between the United States and Great Britain. The immense resources of the bank, a portion of which is now to be used in Chicago, cannot fail to have a favorable effect upon the business interests of the entire Northwest.

We heard, on Saturday, of an instance of liberality rare to be met with. A gentleman in a wholesale establishment in this city left his late employers and entered into one of the public departments. On his leaving, the head of the firm made him the handsome present of $2,000, and the rent of his house for two years, say $480, to mark his appreciation of his services. Such rare occurrences deserve to be recorded.—Quebec Chronicle.

Special Notices.

A correspondent of the Siecle Paris, the government organ of France, writes from Tunis, Algiers, as follows:—

"Our College of philosophers at home may, and probably do accomplish a great deal for the cause of science, but the Americans are the people to turn these discoveries to practical accounts. Many of the modern inventions in use here are American, and one American chemist, Dr. J. C. Ayer of Lowell, supplies much of the medicine consumed in this country. His Cherry Pectoral, Pills, Sarsaparilla, and Ague Cure constitute the staple remedies here, because they are easy of application, sure in their results, and have the confidence of the people. While the science medicine is carried to a (higher perfection, in our own country (France) than any other, it strikes a Frenchman as a little singular that an American Physician should furnish the medical skill and remedies for our own Principal Province.

We are happy to inform our readers that these superior medicines which the Emperor's principal Province is obliged to get from America may be had by our neighbors, at all the Druggists.

EVERY BODY USES IT!! And all agree, that the Canadian Pain Destroyer is the best medicine for the instant and permanent removal of pain from the system, ever yet discovered. It acts as a general alterative, thereby removing the cause of disease, and renovating the action of the system.

For the purposes for which it is recommended it has no equal. Truly it is a "good thing."
